Family of 4 Marines, 1 airman share bond of service and love

By JAMES BOLINGER

MARINE CORPS AIR STATION IWAKUNI, Japan — Lyle Gilbert didn't consider a military career until he felt the pull of patriotism after scores of U.S. troops were killed and injured in the 1986 La Belle disco bombing in West Berlin.

Today, he's a Marine Corps major whose example has led

"For me there was no other alternative than to join the Marines. I never visited another recruiter," said Gilbert, the director of communication strategy at MCAS Iwakuni, alluding to the toughness, image and ethos embodied by the Corps.

End of ALLCAPS, !!! in reviews gains support from sailors

By JOSHUA KARSTEN
AND ERIC SLAVIN
Stars and Stripes

The Navy's new annual performance evaluation will be missing several exclamation points, lots of capital letters and a rating block system that some sailors said allows lesser performers to advance because they aren't being compared broadly enough with their peers.

The Navy's Performance Evaluation Transformation will scrap a written comments section in which phrases like *ROCKSTAR SAILOR WITH UN-SURPASSED TECHNICAL KNOW-HOW!!!! have become boilerplate, and not just for actual rock-star sailors.

It also will eliminate a "forced distribution" system that sailors say can stymie promotions for outstanding sailors who work with outstanding peers, while favoring average sailors with little competition in their workplaces.

The block for written comments, often filled with flattery regardless of a sailor's performance, is going away under plans for a new evaluation system for sailors.

Reviews: New 9-point ranking system gives sailors better chance at promotion

Sailors will be compared across the entire Navy within their pay grades and ratings using a "specific defined standard," said Capt. John Sedlock, the transformation lead at Navy Personnel Command in Millington, Tenn.

Sailor scores under the new system "provide a more realistic measurement of the Sailor's performance and broader differentiation, not just how they rank against peers within the command," Sedlock said.

Sailors who discussed the changes with Stars and Stripes generally welcomed them, but with some reservations about the system replacing it, which is still in testing. Another previously announced aspect of the new system — input from subordinates and peers within the annual evaluations — drew a mix of reviews, as did a smartphone app that allows sailors to test some of the program's new coaching and self-assessment features.

"The evaluation system needed to break away from the word game (making mediocre sound fantastic and good leaders sound bad because of personal vendettas, conflicts, and leadership differences), forced distribution for seniority benefit, and writing styles that may or may not grasp your ratings attention at a board," Chief Petty Officer Wendell Harrison, a boatswain's mate from Sigonella, Italy, said in an email.

However, commands have over the years adapted to the hyperbole of the 18-line maximum, written comment section known as Block 43, often learning to read between the lines.

The block also gives commands an opportunity to learn what impact a sailor made beyond numeric values, said Petty Officer 1st Class Sylvia Nealy, stationed in Bahrain.

"On the flip side, sailors will NOT have the opportunity to add false and unnecessary 'fluff' in their evaluation while exaggerating the truth," Nealy wrote in an email.

Nealy said the end of forced distribution will give high performers a better shot at promotion. The current system includes a block where sailors receive either an "early promote," a "must promote," "promotable" or a lesser mark. The top 20 percent of sailors in a department, which may have only one sailor or dozens, generally are eligible for the early promote ranking.

Under the current system, sailors do not have "the opportunity to move up for promotion if a previous Sailor from the command "already" has the EP and the command "continues" to assist this Sailor," regardless of whether the sailor deserved the early promote, Nealy said.

The new evaluation will include an expanded value statement section, which grades sailors based on professional knowledge, work quality, military bearing and other areas. The 5-point ranking will now include a 9-point scale that will judge whether a sailor is doing the job below, at or above the standards of their rank.

Evaluators will be timed in their responses, "to provide an instinctual assessment of their qualities and is based on proven behavioral science studies that indicate an initial response is usually the most candid and accurate," Sedlock said.

Chief Petty Officer Matthew Herndon, an administration yeoman from Naval Air Station Sigonella, Italy, tried out the new system by completing an online self-assessment.

Herndon liked the new system's timed inputs but wasn't impressed by the new coaching system, which begins with a self-assessment.

"The new system doesn't describe how sailors can fix (weaknesses listed by the sailor) nor gives insight on why the things they're doing good or things they need to work on is good for them ... or vice versa," Herndon said.

Petty Officer 2nd Class Richard White, a personnel specialist in Bahrain, says he likes the 9-point rating scale and the incorporation of peer and subordinate input, which allows for the inclusion of "strengths and weaknesses that may not be noticed or voiced in regular evaluations."

But White also expressed concern for potential delays with so many inputs affecting a timely completion.

Some expressed concern that subordinates might not have a complete picture of a sailor's duties or might input during the coaching phase to further a grudge; however, any such ranking would only be part of a larger coaching report.

Others said subordinate input during the coaching phase would be a benefit.

"We as sailors and leaders can all make improvements to ourselves, and the ones who will not shy away from letting you know that are the junior leaders," Harrison said.

The evaluation overhaul team is now conducting its third test phase of the system, which includes 10,000 participants from 140 commands, and is primarily focused on the coaching system.

Sedlock added that the biggest challenge for the new system is the expected resistance to change around the fleet.

"This endeavor requires a fundamental change in culture where we embrace the delivery and receipt of honest and candid feedback that enables us all to better achieve our optimal levels of performance," Sedlock said.

The overhaul is part of a larger push from Navy leadership called Sailor 2025, an initiative designed to improve pay, personnel and career management systems, Navy officials said.

Top Stars and Stripes staff photos from 2018

From staff reports

Stars and Stripes 2018 photographs captured grief and sacrifice from around the world.

They ranged from the remains of servicemembers handed over by North Korea to a moon rising over the U.S. Marine Corps War Memorial in Virginia, to the view of Sen. John McCain lying in state in the Capitol's Rotunda and a Marine walking through the graves at Aisne-Marne American Cemetery in France.

In a social media contest where the Stars and Stripes readers voted on Facebook for their favorite photo, there was one clear winner — a Memorial Day salute to fallen troops.

On May 28, a field of 500 luminary lights and a display of images, names and videos of U.S. troops who have died in America's post-9/11 wars was set up near the Bagram Air Field PX in Afghanistan. Taken by down-range reporter Chad Garland, the photo illustrates the toll the wars have taken on American servicemembers.

The photo had more than double the amount of votes than any other image.

Afghanistan: Remembering the fallen of 2018

By PHILLIP WALTER WELLMAN
Stars and Stripes

KABUL, Afghanistan—Fourteen American servicemembers were killed in Afghanistan in 2018 as the longest war in U.S. history enters its 18th year in October.

Many of the servicemembers who died in Afghanistan this year were from elite units. The deadliest single incident occurred in November, when four troops were killed by a roadside bomb in central Ghazni province.

Sgt. 1st Class Mihail Golin

Army Special Forces Sgt. 1st Class Mihail Golin, 34, was killed in New Year's Day firefight in Afghanistan's eastern Nangarhar province. Golin, of Fort Lee, N.J., was assigned to the Fort Carson, Colo.-based B Company, 2nd Battalion, 10th Special Forces Group. The weapons sergeant was born in Latvia and moved to the U.S. in 2004. He enlisted in the Army in 2005. He was on his fourth deployment to Afghanistan when he was killed. He received the Purple Heart with one oak leaf cluster, an Army Commendation Medal with two oak leaf clusters and an Army Achievement Medal with two oak leaf clusters, among other decorations.

Spc. Gabriel D. Conde

Army Spc. Gabriel D. Conde, 22, of Loveland, Colo., was killed by small-arms fire on April 30 during a firefight in Kapisa province. He was assigned to the 3rd Battalion, 509th Infantry Regiment, 4th Infantry Brigade Combat Team, 25th Infantry Division, stationed at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson in Alaska. Conde's family said he had a calling to be a warrior. "I feel very proud of who he is," his mother Donna Conde told Denver's Fox 31 after her son's death. "He is the kind of son any mother would be proud to have." Among his awards and honors were a Purple Heart and a Bronze Star with valor, which were awarded posthumously for battlefield heroism.

Cpl. Joseph Maciel

Army Cpl. Joseph Maciel, 20, was killed in an apparent insider attack in Tirm Kot district in Uruzgan province on July 7. Originally from South Gate, Calif., Maciel was assigned to the 1st Security Force Assistance Brigade. Maciel served in the Army for two years and was assigned to Fort Benning, Ga. He was described as a soldier beloved by his colleagues and dedicated to the mission. His decorations include the Bronze Star and the Purple Heart.

Sgt. 1st Class Christopher A. Celiz

Army Sgt. 1st Class Christopher Andrew Celiz, 32, died of a wound sustained while evacuating a wounded Afghan soldier in Celiz as "a national treasure who led his Rangers with passion, competence and an infectiously positive attitude no matter the situation." Celiz was posthumously awarded the Purple Heart, the Bronze Star and a Meritorious Service Medal.

Staff Sgt. Reymund R. Transfiguration

Green Beret Staff Sgt. Reymund Rarogal Transfiguration, 36, from Wailoika, Hawaii, died on Aug. 8 from improvised explosive device wounds received the day before while on patrol in southern Helmand province. Transfiguration was assigned to the 3rd Battalion, 1st Special Forces Group (Airborne), at Joint Base Lewis-McChord in Washington. He was posthumously promoted to sergeant first class and awarded the Bronze Star, the Purple Heart and the Meritorious Service Medal. Transfiguration was described by fellow soldiers as a dynamic leader and trusted professional. He is survived by his wife and two children, a son and a daughter.

Sgt. Maj. Timothy Bolyard

Army Command Sgt. Maj. Timothy Bolyard, 42, was killed by an insider attack at a forward operating base in eastern Logar province on Sept. 3. Originally from Thornton, W.Va., Bolyard was described as a soldier who always kept his cool under pressure. He was a senior noncommissioned officer in 3rd Squadron, 1st Security Force Assistance Brigade, 4th Infantry at Fort Benning, Ga., and received six Bronze Star medals, including two with valor, during a 24-year career and seven deployments. Bolyard is survived by his wife and three children.

Staff Sgt. Diobanjo S. Sanagustin

Army Staff Sgt. Diobanjo S. Sanagustin, 32, died from a noncombat injury at Bagram Air Field on Sept. 4. The native of National City, Calif., joined the Army as an infantryman in 2007.

He deployed three times to Kosovo, Iraq and Afghanistan. He was assigned to the 4th Battalion, 9th Infantry Regiment, 1st Stryker Brigade Combat Team, 4th Infantry Division. He was a squad leader in Bravo Company. "He made a lasting impact on the Manchu formation, and we will forever cherish his memory," said Lt. Col. David Uthlaut, commander of 4th Battalion. Sanagustin's awards and decorations include two Army Commendation Medals, seven Army Achievement Medals, two Iraq Campaign Medals with campaign star and the Expert Infantryman's Badge.

Spc. James A. Slape

Army Spc. James A. Slape, 23, of Morehead City, N.C., was killed by an IED blast in southern Helmand province on Oct. 4. He was posthumously promoted to sergeant. At the time of his death, Slape was clearing an area of explosives. He was assigned to the 430th Explosive Ordnance Disposal Company, 60th Troop Command, North Carolina Army National Guard, based in Washington, N.C. "We honor his courage, his selfless service," said Maj. Gen. Greg Lusk, North Carolina National Guard adjutant.

Maj. Brent Taylor

U.S. Army National Guard Maj. Brent Taylor, 39, was killed during an insider attack in Kabul on Nov. 3. Taylor was the mayor of North Ogden, Utah, at the time of his death. He had a "profound influence" on the community, according to a statement by the local government. "He was the best of men with the ability to see potential and possibility in everything around him," the statement said. "We feel blessed to have had him as our mayor." Taylor served twice in Iraq as a convoy security commander and then as an adviser to the Iraqi intelligence agency. He had previously deployed to Afghanistan as a combat adviser to the Afghan Border Police. He is survived by his wife and seven children.

Sgt. Leandro A.S. Jasso

Army Sgt. Leandro A.S. Jasso, 25, was mortally wounded during a firefight with al-Qaida forces in western Nimroz province on Nov. 24. He was assigned to 2nd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, and was on his third deployment to Afghanistan. Jasso enlisted in the Army in 2012 and became an accomplished soldier completing the Basic Airborne Course, earning the Combat Infantryman's Badge and the Ranger tab. "Sgt. Jasso was a humble professional who placed mission first, lived the Ranger Creed and will be deeply missed," said Lt. Col. Rob McChrystal, commander of the 2nd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Staff Sgt. Dylan J. Elchin

Air Force Staff Sgt. Dylan J. Elchin, 25, was killed by a roadside bomb in central Ghazni province on Nov. 27, an attack that claimed the lives of three other U.S. servicemembers. Elchin, of Hookstown, Pa., was the only airman killed in Afghanistan in 2018 and was on his first deployment. He was a combat controller assigned to the 26th Special Tactics Squadron at Cannon Air Force Base, N.M. Elchin was described by his family as a daredevil who was driven to succeed in the Air Force. He was planning to marry his fiancée when he finished his deployment. His awards and decorations include the Bronze Star, Purple Heart, Army Commendation Medal with Valor, Air Force Commendation Medal and Air Force Combat Action Medal. "He's the whole family's hero," said his brother, Aaron.

Capt. Andrew P. Ross

Army Capt. Andrew Patrick Ross, 29, also was killed by the roadside bomb in central Ghazni province that day. Ross, of Lexington, Va., was assigned to 1st Battalion, 3rd Special Forces Group (Airborne) at Fort Bragg, N.C. The West Point graduate had more than seven years of service in the Army and was on his second overseas tour. Ross' wife, Felicia, called him "the most perfect man, love of my life." His honors and decorations include two Bronze Star medals, a Purple Heart and the Meritorious Service Medal, among others.

Sgt. 1st Class Eric M. Emond

Army Sgt. 1st Class Eric Michael Emond, 39, was another servicemember killed by a roadside bomb in central Ghazni province on Nov. 27. The Boston native had served more than two decades in the Army and the Marine Corps and was on his seventh overseas tour when he died. He was posthumously awarded the Bronze Star, Purple Heart and Meritorious Service Medal. A husband and father of three young girls from Brush Prairie, Wash., Emond was assigned to 1st Battalion, 3rd Special Forces Group (Airborne) at Fort Bragg, N.C. He helped found Massachusetts Fallen Heroes, which supports veterans of Iraq and Afghanistan and Gold Star families from his home state. "He was the bedrock of the organization," said Dan Magoon, the foundation's executive director.

Sgt. Jason M. McClary

Army Sgt. Jason Mitchell McClary, 24, of Export, Pa., died on Dec. 2 in Landstuhl, Germany, from wounds sustained during the Nov. 27 roadside bomb attack in Afghanistan's central Ghazni province, where the three other U.S. troops were killed. McClary, an infantryman, was assigned to 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, 1st Stryker Brigade Combat Team, 4th Infantry Division, Fort Carson, Colo. "He epitomizes what it is to be a professional, a warrior and a soldier," McClary's regimental commander Lt. Col. Christopher Roberts said. McClary's awards and decorations include two Purple Heart medals, three Army Commendation Medals, including one with valor and one for combat, among others. He is survived by his wife and two sons.

MILITARY

Pvt. Tyler Gilbert, center, poses with his mother, Johanna, and his father, Maj. Lyle Gilbert, Nov. 30 at Parris Island, S.C., after completing recruit training.

Family: Father says he didn't push his children to join military

His eldest daughter, Marine Capt. Sarah Rhodes, 29, is a company commander at Marine Corps Recruit Depot Parris Island, S.C. She is a communication strategy officer by trade, just like her father. Marines in that field serve as military journalists, broadcasters, photographers and public relations specialists.

Rhodes' younger sister, Marine Sgt. Jordan Gilbert, 25, is also in communication strategy and stationed on Okinawa.

Maurice Murrain, 19, whom the couple adopted at 12, graduated Air Force basic training Sept. 28.

Tyler Gilbert, 18, who graduated recruit training Nov. 30, was a member of the same recruit company and battalion his father graduated from 32 years ago. He is now headed to Camp Lejeune, N.C., where he will attend combat engineer school.

The Gilberts trace their Marine Corps heritage to Lyle's father, Dominic, who served in the 1950s. He also worked behind a camera and today would be considered a communication strategy Marine like his son and granddaughters.

Like dominoes

Rhodes was the first of her siblings to sign on the dotted line, in 2012, and said she joined because of the examples set by her parents. Her mother and biological father were in the Army, and she grew up around the Marine Corps and participated in the Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps while attending high school on Okinawa.

"I loved everything about the uniform," Rhodes said. "That feeling of pride started me on the path to joining the Marine Corps."

Jordan Gilbert was next, in April 2013. She was recently selected for promotion to staff sergeant and will sew on her new rocker this year.

"I got supermotivated when my older sister graduated" from Officer Candidate School, Jordan said. "The whole plane ride back, I asked my dad a bunch of different questions, and the next month I signed up."

The Gilberts' sons graduated from MCAS Iwakuni's Matthew C. Perry High School together earlier this year and are both seniors growing up. So much so, that the Gilberts adopted Murrain in 2012 before moving to Okinawa.

Murrain said he wasn't set on joining the Air Force until his junior year of high school. Today, he is attending technical school for aircraft structural maintenance at Pensacola Naval Air Station, Fla. He hopes to be stationed at Okinawa's Kadena Air Base after graduation.

Before leaving home for recruit training, his brother, Tyler, said being a Marine has always been his dream. "Growing up around the Marine Corps made me want to join," he said. "It's a pride thing. (Two of) my sisters had already joined, and I really wanted to make my parents proud. I think the military is the best way to do that."

Family within a family

Lyle Gilbert met his wife, Johanna, then a specialist and finance technician in the Army, while training to become a Marine broadcaster at the Defense Information School at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. Together, the couple has raised a tightknit family with an emphasis on service. Currently, Johanna is a civilian nurse and lives in North Carolina. "I think we built it together, although the greater balance was with my wife," Lyle Gilbert said. "She has always been very nurturing, very loving, very open. She always wanted to have a place where the friends come, not a place our kids wanted to stay away from."

Their children remember growing up around young Marines from their father's work who would join the family for holiday parties and other gatherings.

"On Christmas, these corporals and lance corporals would be watching movies in the living room," Jordan Gilbert said. "Even when dad was deployed, my mom would always have his Marines over."

That bond carries over even though the family is now spread all over the world.

"We grew up together," Rhodes said. "And we go through it in the Marine Corps together as well. We have an extra bond that not everyone has."

Lyle said he understands that most of his children will likely be deployed — potentially to combat zones. "The only thing needed for evil to prevail is for good and capable men and women to stand idly by and do nothing. And I tell [my children] that," he said. "If not you, then who? Serving your country, protecting your fellow man and your family, putting it all on the line for that, it's why we are all here."

He said he was very proud when he heard that Rhodes had decided to join the Marines. Despite his and his wife's pride in their own service, Lyle Gilbert said he didn't push his children to join the military.

Instead, he said, the focus was on serving others and doing things the right way.

"If you are going to do something, do it 100 percent," said Tyler Gilbert, explaining one of his father's philosophies. "Even if it's a mostly meaningless task, do it and do it right. Do it the way it is supposed to be done, not just to get it over with."

Two Gilbert children chose paths outside the military. Emily Gilbert, 20, is teaching English at a preschool in Iwakuni while seeking a degree in elementary education.

"I had made it very apparent that I wasn't going to join the military," she said. "It's their thing. It's amazing what they are doing, but I wouldn't be able to do it."

Amanda Segbiano, 27, lives in California, holds a degree in sociology and plans to work as a counselor for formerly incarcerated adults.

What the future holds

While many of the Gilberts' children may be on active duty for the next several years, none is committed to making the service a career like their father.

Rhodes will hit her six-year mark in December. She said she wants to see what her next station holds before she commits to the long term.

Lyle Gilbert is also at a crossroads. January will mark his 33rd year in the Marine Corps. Though retirement has long been an option, he was notified of his selection to lieutenant colonel the day before Tyler completed recruit training. With his tour at MCAS Iwakuni coming to an end this year, he said all options are on the table.

"The first thing we advise our children, with anything in life, is to pray about it," his wife said.

"Then do your homework. Know what you're getting into and make sure it's something you want and can do. The military brings discipline, sacrifice and commitment. They understood this, and it's not a decision they have taken lightly."

"As a mom, I couldn't be more proud," she added. "And our family photos are amazing!"

Trump defends Syria exit as Putin, Erdogan fill void

Bloomberg

President Donald Trump defended his decision to withdraw from Syria as the fulfillment of a campaign promise, pushing back against criticism from lawmakers in his own party that the abrupt change in policy harms U.S. interests and cedes influence to Russia and Iran.

"I campaigned on getting out of Syria and other places," Trump said Monday on Twitter. "Now when I start getting out the Fake News Media, or some failed Generals who were unable to do the job before I arrived like to complain about me & my tactics, which are working. Just doing what I said I was going to do!"

With the U.S. preparing its exit, Russian President Vladimir Putin and Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan have assumed the lead in shaping Syria's future. At a meeting in Moscow between the two countries' foreign ministers and intelligence chiefs on Saturday, they agreed to coordinate next steps and professed a common interest in clearing the country of terrorist groups.

But that doesn't mean Russia and Turkey are completely aligned. The Syrian war has often pitted them on opposite sides, with Russia backing Syrian President Bashar Assad while Turkey was the most vocal proponent of overthrowing and replacing him.

To further complicate the issue, while Trump said that NATO ally Turkey has promised to clear out what's left of Islamic State in Syria, Erdogan has also been looking for an opportunity to hit back at a U.S.-backed Kurdish group in Syria, the YPG, which led some of the most intense fighting against Islamic State. Turkey views the YPG as a menace to its internal security and classifies it as a terrorist organization.

Trump's decision left the YPG exposed to an invasion by Turkey's army, the second-largest in NATO, and prompted the resignation of his defense secretary, Jim Mattis.

Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham, a member of the Senate Armed Forces Committee from South Carolina, has been implying that his efforts to persuade Trump to slow down the withdrawal were working, telling CNN on Sunday that "if we leave now, the Kurds are going to get slaughtered." He said Trump would be talking to Turkey to make sure that war didn't break out "between the Turks and our allies the Kurds."

Graham also cited the continuing presence in Syria of Iran, Trump's designated arch-enemy in the Middle East, saying, "If we leave now, there'll be a land bridge from Tehran to Beirut in terms of supplying weapons against Israel."

Trump already has backed away from the notion of an immediate withdrawal, saying a week ago that the pullout of U.S. troops from the area would be "slow & highly coordinated."

Facts on the ground have changed rapidly in the two weeks since Trump first tweeted his intention to bring home U.S. troops.

With support from the Kremlin, Syria's Assad sent government troops to retake control of the key town of Manbij on Friday, replacing the U.S.-backed YPG forces as the dominant power in the area and preempting a Turkish invasion. Assad has now reasserted his control of most of the country after an eight-year war that killed hundreds of thousands and left many of the country's cities as uninhabitable wastelands.

Russia and Turkey have a crucial role to play in ending the conflict and mapping out the future of Syria, Putin told Erdogan in a New Year's message published by the Kremlin on Sunday, a day after the meeting in Moscow between their envoys.

In a New Year's message to Assad, Putin said Russia "will continue to provide all possible assistance" to Syria in "the fight against the forces of terrorism, in defense of state sovereignty and territorial integrity."

'Hold fast': Mattis departs with a new message, but no fanfare

By DAN LAMOTHE
The Washington Post

JABIN BOTSFOORD/The Washington Post

Defense Secretary Jim Mattis at the White House in February.

Defense Secretary Jim Mattis planned to leave his office Monday night with none of the pageantry typically associated with the position, and a short message to U.S. troops: "Hold fast."

Mattis, who resigned Dec. 20, planned to stay at Pentagon chief through Feb. 28 to ensure a smooth transition. He was forced out earlier by President Donald Trump on Dec. 23, as the president complained about the media coverage he was receiving over the resignation. The defense secretary has said little since then, but he asked Defense Department personnel on Monday to remain "undistracted" from their mission to uphold the U.S. Constitution.

"On February 1, 1865, President Lincoln sent to General Ulysses S. Grant a one sentence telegram. It read: 'Let nothing which is inspiring, change, hinder, or delay your military movements, or plans.'" Mattis wrote in a memo released by the Pentagon.

"Our Department's leadership, civilian and military, remains in the best of possible hands. I am confident that each of you remains undistracted from our sworn mission to support and defend the Constitution while protecting our way of life," Mattis continued. "Our Department is proven to be at its best when the times are most difficult. So keep the faith in our country and hold fast, alongside our allies, aligned against our foes."

Mattis, 68, added that "it has been my high honor to serve at your side."

"May God hold you safe in the air, on land, and at sea," he concluded.

Like his pointed resignation letter, Mattis's goodbye memo stresses the need to stand along traditional allies, something Trump has repeatedly questioned. Trump dismissed the concerns Mattis raised in his resignation letter Dec. 23, saying in a tweet that "many of these same countries take advantage of their friendship with the United States."

In keeping with Mattis's wishes, the Pentagon will not hold a traditional farewell ceremony for him. Pentagon chiefs who leave office — even when forced out — typically are sent off with a ceremony in which the president plays a prominent role.

"Secretary Mattis prefers that today, like every day, the focus remain on the mission and those who carry it out," said Dana White, the chief Pentagon spokesman.

Massachusetts judge sides with 'bad paper' veterans denied bonuses

By NIKKI WENTLING
Stars and Stripes

WASHINGTON — A Massachusetts judge sided with three Afghanistan war veterans who filed a lawsuit against the state after being denied "Welcome Home" bonuses because of their other-than-honorable military discharges.

In a decision handed down Wednesday, Associate Justice Michael Ricciuti ordered the Massachusetts Veterans' Bonus Appeal Board to reconsider rejecting the veterans. Lawyers in the case estimate that beyond their three clients, the decision means about 4,000 Massachusetts veterans will be eligible now for the bonuses.

"Veterans with bad paper discharges are among the most at-risk veterans and yet are often told that they are ineligible for traditional veteran services and programs," said Laurel Fresquez, an attorney who represented the three veterans. "Thanks to this decision and these three veterans, thousands of Massachusetts veterans will finally have a right to some recognition for their honorable service to our country."

The Massachusetts legislature created the Welcome Home Bonus in 2005 for post-9/11 servicemembers. Under the program, people who deployed to Iraq or Afghanistan — and lived in Massachusetts for a period of less than six months before enlisting — are eligible to apply for a one-time, tax-free $1,000 bonus. The program is run by the state treasury.

Jeffrey Machado, Washington Santos and Herik Espinosa — three Army veterans named in the lawsuit — each completed enlistments and re-joined multiple times. They applied for the Welcome Home Bonus and were denied by the treasury and then the Veterans' Bonus Appeal Board, which argued their other-than-honorable discharges from their final enlistments made them ineligible.

Machado, Santos and Espinosa, represented by student attorneys at Harvard Law School's Veterans Legal Clinic, filed a lawsuit in 2017 in Massachusetts Superior Court. In the complaint, they argued the board should take into consideration their prior enlistments, which they completed honorably.

The judge agreed, calling the state's denial "erroneous as a matter of law, arbitrary and capricious." He said the board's decision to deny the benefit disincentivized servicemembers from enlisting multiple times.

The Bonus Law was designed to reward service to the country," Ricciuti's order reads. "The board's reading would penalize such service for military members who voluntarily remain in combat, a result at odds with the legislature's intent."

In a statement Sunday, Machado, the lead plaintiff, said the decision meant more than the $1,000 — it was a symbolic win for veterans with other-than-honorable discharges.

Those discharges, known as "bad paper," can prevent veterans from receiving federal assistance, such as Department of Veterans Affairs health care, disability payments, education and housing. Some lawmakers and veteran advocates have long argued servicemembers with bad paper were, in many cases, unjustly released from the military because of mental health issues.

The Government Accountability Office released findings in 2017 that the Defense Department separated approximately 92,000 servicemembers for misconduct from 2011 through 2015, and 57,000 of them were diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder, traumatic brain injury or other conditions that can change servicemembers' moods and behaviors and lead to disciplinary problems.

Machado deployed to Afghanistan during Operation Enduring Freedom in 2012-13 and immediately re-enlisted. According to the complaint, Machado's service ended in 2014 with an other-than-honorable discharge that was "given out after the wounds of war and the stress of service became too great."

Machado was later diagnosed with PTSD and applied for the Welcome Home Bonus during a particularly tough time when facing the possibility of homelessness, his lawyers said.

"What really matters to me is that other Massachusetts veterans will be recognized for their honorable service to our country," Machado said in a statement. "It's less about the bonus itself — it's about what it represents."

Veterans who believe they're now eligible for the bonus can apply for it through the state government website. Dana Montalto, a clinical instructor at the Veterans Legal Clinic, said she hoped the state would reach out to veterans who might be eligible.

"For now, the burden is on these veterans to find out about this decision and apply," Montalto said in a statement.

The Massachusetts decision follows other recent wins for veterans with other-than-honorable discharges.

Congress approved a measure in March that requires the VA to provide veterans with mental health screenings and care, even if they received bad paper. Veterans who served in combat zones or areas of hostilities, worked as drone operators in combat zones or experienced sexual abuse or assault are exempt.

In addition, Connecticut opened its state VA resources in October to veterans who can show their other-than-honorable discharges are linked to PTSD, traumatic brain injury or sexual trauma. It's estimated 800 veterans could benefit from the change.

Trump reaffirms his wall pledge

By ZEKE MILLER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Despite public evaluations by three confidants, President Donald Trump is insisting he wants to build a wall along the U.S.-Mexico border. “An all concrete Wall was NEVER ABANDONED,” tweeted Trump, whose demand for congressional funding to construct one has caused a budgetary standoff. “Some areas will be all concrete but the experts at Border Patrol prefer a Wall that is see through (thereby making it possible to see what is happening on both sides).”

Trump’s comments on Monday came after officials, including his departing chief of staff, indicated that the president’s signature campaign pledge to build the wall would not be fulfilled as advertised.

Trump sparked fervent chants of “Build that wall!” at rallies before and after his election and more recently cited a lack of funding for a border wall as the reason for partially shutting down the government. At times the president has also waved off the idea that the wall could be any kind of barrier.

However, White House chief of staff John Kelly told the Los Angeles Times in an interview published Sunday that Trump abandoned the notion of “a solid concrete wall early on in the administration.”

Along the same lines, White House counselor Kellyanne Conway called discussion of the apparent contradiction “a silly semantic argument.”

Sen. Lindsey Graham, the South Carolina Republican who is close to the president, emerged from a Sunday lunch at the White House to tell reporters that “the wall has become a metaphor for border security” and referred to “a physical barrier along the border.”

Sen. Heidi Zinke said Trump was “open-minded” about a broader immigration agreement, saying the budget impasse presented an opportunity to address issues beyond the border wall. But a previous attempt to reach a compromise that addressed the status of “Dreamers” — young immigrants brought to the U.S. as children — broke down last year as a result of escalating White House demands.

Graham said he hoped to end the shutdown by offering Democrats incentives to get them to vote for wall funding and told

PABLO MARTINEZ MONSIVIAIS/AP

After meeting with President Donald Trump at the White House on Sunday, South Carolina Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham, above, said the budget impasse presents an opportunity to address immigration issues beyond the border wall Trump is seeking.

CNN before his lunch with Trump that “there will never be a deal without wall funding.”

Graham proposed to help two groups of immigrants get approval to continue living in the U.S.: about 700,000 young “Dreamers” brought into the U.S. illegally as children and about 400,000 people receiving temporary protected status because they are from countries struggling with natural disasters or armed conflicts. He also said the compromise should include changes in federal law to discourage people from trying to enter the U.S. illegally.

“Democrats have a chance here to work with me and others, including the president, to bring legal status to people who have very uncertain lives,” Graham said.

The partial government shutdown began Dec. 22 after Trump bowed to conservative demands that he fight to make good on his vow to secure funding for the wall before Republicans lose control of the House on Wednesday. Democrats have remained committed to blocking the Republican president’s priority, and with neither side engaging in substantive negotiation, the effect of the partial shutdown was set to spread and to extend into the new year.

Talks have been at a stalemate for more than a week, after Democrats said the White House offered to accept $2.5 billion for border security. Senate Democratic leader Chuck Schumer told Vice President Mike Pence that it wasn’t acceptable, nor was it guaranteed that Trump, under intense pressure from his conservative base to fulfill his signature campaign promise, would settle for that amount.

Conway claimed Sunday that “the president has already compromised” by dropping his request for the wall from $25 billion, and she called on Democrats to return to the negotiating table.

Democrats maintain that they have already presented the White House with three options to end the shutdown, none of which funds the wall, and insist that it’s Trump’s move.

The shutdown has forced hundreds of thousands of federal workers and contractors to stay home or work without pay.

this moment.”

Her likely path to the nomination would require winning a mix of women, progressives and non-white voters, Marsh said.

Warren faces demographic and geographical challenges. She’ll be 70 in February 2020 at the start of nominating contests, which will feature scores of millennial and non-white voters who want candidates that are culturally relevant to them. She may face several African-American opponents in a party where black voters have been decisive in picking the presidential nominee in the last two open contests — Hillary Clinton in 2016, and Barack Obama in 2008.

And Warren also faces a biographical challenge. She’s been derisively labeled “Pocahontas” by Trump for her self-proclaimed Native American heritage. Seeking to quell the criticism, Warren in October released a DNA test showing evidence, a move that only provoked more pushback from Cherokee Nation and other advocates, who said it’s wrong and inappropriate to claim Native American identity on the basis of blood.

Kelly defends rocky time at White House

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — In August 2017, shortly after John Kelly became White House chief of staff, he convened crucial meetings on Afghanistan at President Donald Trump’s golf club in Bedminster, N.J.

Top officials from the Pentagon and the CIA, the director of national intelligence, diplomats and lawmakers huddled with Trump as Kelly and others urged him not to give up in Afghanistan.

“When I first took over, he was inclined to want to withdraw from Afghanistan,” Kelly recounted during an exclusive interview Friday with the Los Angeles Times.

“He was frustrated. It was a huge decision to make ... and frankly there was no system at all for a lot of reasons — palace intrigue and the rest of it — when I got there.”

The retired four-star Marine general will leave the administration Wednesday. First as Homeland Security chief and then in 18 months at the White House, he presided over some of the Trump administration’s most controversial immigration and security policies.

In the interview, Kelly defended his rocky tenure, arguing that it is best measured by what the president did not do when Kelly was at his side. It was only after Kelly’s departure was confirmed Dec. 8, for example, that Trump announced the pullout of all U.S. troops from Syria and half the 14,000 troops from Afghanistan — two moves that Kelly had opposed.

Kelly’s supporters say he stepped in to block or divert the president on dozens of matters. They credit him, in part, for persuading Trump not to pull U.S. forces out of South Korea, or withdraw from NATO, as he had threatened.

Kelly said he made sure that Trump had access to multiple sources of detailed information before he made a decision.

“It’s never been: The president just wants to make a decision based on no knowledge and ignorance,” Kelly said. “You may not like his decision, but at least he was fully informed on the impact.”

Kelly sometimes pressed his advisers on the limits of his authority under the law, often asking Kelly, “Why can’t we do it this way?” But Trump never ordered him to do anything illegal, Kelly stressed, “because we wouldn’t have.”

“If he had said to me, ‘Do it, or you’re fired,’” Kelly said, he would have complied.

Kelly served 46 years in the Marines, making him the U.S. military’s longest-serving general when he retired in January 2016. When Trump picked him to head Homeland Security, and then serve as chief of staff, officials from the Pentagon and the CIA expressed hope that Kelly would be one of the “adults in the room” to manage a mercurial president.

To critics, Kelly failed, unable to rein in Trump’s angry tweets or bring order to executive decision-making. Worse, they argue, he aggressively advocated and implemented harsh immigration measures, including separating migrant children from their parents on the border last summer, that quickly ran aground or were reversed in the courts.

Kelly said he decided it was time to leave after the Nov. 6 midterm election, which saw heavy Republican losses in Congress and statehouses. On Dec. 14, Trump named Mick Mulvaney, his budget director, as acting chief of staff.

When Kelly was asked why he stayed 18 months in the White House, he said simply: duty.

“Military people,” he said, “don’t walk away.”

Warren takes key step toward 2020 presidential run

Bloomberg

Sen. Elizabeth Warren took a major step on Monday toward an all-but-certain 2020 White House run, seeking to become the Democratic nominee to challenge President Donald Trump on a message of economic equality and fighting corruption.

The Massachusetts progressive said in a New Year’s Eve email and video message to supporters that she’s launching an exploratory committee for a presidential run, which would give her a potential early edge in fundraising and organization. She said American families were “under attack from every direction,” due to a government that “bought and paid for by a bunch of billionaires and giant corporations that think they get to dictate the rules.”

Warren previewed her populist message in a recent interview with Bloomberg News.

“I’m in this fight for hard-working families. And that means reducing the student loan debt burden, increasing our Social Security payments for the ones who depend most on it, and the overarching piece, reducing corruption in government,” the senator said.

“Right now, Washington works great for the wealthy — the well-connected, it’s just not working for much of anyone else,” Warren added.

Warren, who handily won a second six-year Senate term in November, has become a polarizing figure due to her aggressive criticisms of Wall Street, her support for raising taxes on rich Americans to help fight income inequality, and her push to regulate large corporations that she often depicts as preying on ordinary people.

But that same advocacy, which dates back to her time as a Harvard law professor, has endeared her to a progressive base full of voters who are hungry for a sharp left turn by the Democratic Party.

“She was doing populist economics before everybody thought it was cool. So she has a background and message that has met its moment,” said Mary Anne Marsh, a Democratic consultant based in Boston, who argued that Warren is a front-runner because “she’s spent the better part of the last 18 months laying the groundwork for

What a yuge year!

N. Korea, Kavanaugh, all those Trump tweets and more in 2018

BY CALVIN WOODWARD

Associated Press

WASHINGTON—The stranger-than-sitcom American presidency opened 2018 with a big tease about mutual nuclear destruction from two leaders who then found “love” not war. It seems President Donald Trump and North Korea’s Kim Jong Un were just playing hard to get.

The presidency ends the year saturated in tumult, with the government in partial shutdown and Trump tweeting a video of himself warbling a parody of the theme song from “Green Acres,” a television sitcom from the 1960s, to mark his signing of a farm bill.

Throw in a beer-loving and very angry Supreme Court nominee, an unhappy departing defense secretary, Trump’s parallel universe of facts and his zillion tweets, and you can see that the president’s world this year was touched by the weird, the traumatic and the fantastical — also known as WTF.

There was no holding back the self-described “very stable genius” with the “very, very large brain.”

Some serious and relatively conventional things got done in 2018.

There was a midterm election. Many more Democrats are coming to Congress and not quite all of them plan to run for president. Divided government dawns in January when Democrats take control of the House; Republicans retain their grip on the Senate.

An overhaul of the criminal justice system was accomplished, and in an unusually bipartisan way, though it took a dash of reality TV’s Kim Kardashian West to move it along. Gun control actually was tightened a bit, with Trump’s unilateral banning of bump stocks.

Trump shocked allies and lost Defense Secretary Jim Mattis over a presidential decision to pull U.S. troops out of Syria, quickly following up with indications that up to half the troops in Afghanistan might be withdrawn, too.

Self-described “Tariff Man” started one trade war, with China, and headed off a second by tweaking the North American Free Trade Agreement and giving it an unpronounceable acronym, USMCA. He withdrew the U.S. from the Iran nuclear deal, putting action behind his Twitter shout: “WE ARE NO LONGER A COUNTRY THAT WILL STAND FOR YOUR DEMENTED WORDS OF VIOLENCE & DEATH.”

Trump placed his second justice on the Supreme Court in two years after Brett Kavanaugh, accused of alcohol-fueled sexual assault in his youth, raged against the allegations at a congressional hearing and acknowledged only: “I liked beer, I still like beer,” but “I never sexually assaulted anyone.”

There were frustrations and fulminations aplenty for the president, particularly about the steaming-ahead Russia-Trump campaign investigation by special counsel Robert Mueller.

Nor did he make much progress on his promised border wall, which he renamed “artistically designed steel slats” in December in what he regarded as a concession to wall-despising, concrete-cursing Democrats. The concession did not work: large parts of the government closed Dec. 22 over the wall-induced budget impasse.

He took heat for a zero-tolerance policy that forced migrant children from their parents until he backed off, inaccurately blaming Democrats for “Child Separation.”

It was a very good year for jobs. It was a check-your-smartphone-right-now, pass-the-smelling-salts year for the stock market. Trump, who assailed the unemployment rate as a phony measure when he was a candidate, couldn’t speak of it enough as Obama-era job growth continued on his watch. He went mum about the market, a prime subject for his boasting before it took a sustained dive.

Trump’s approval rating in polls was one of the few constants on this swiftly tilting planet: 42 percent approval and 56 percent disapproval in The Associated Press-NORC’s latest and 38 percent-57 percent via Gallup, neither much different than in January.

Through it all, the mainstreaming of the bizarre proceeded apace and North Korea’s Kim set that tone right on Jan. 1 with his New Year cheer to Americans across the ocean: “It’s not a mere threat but a reality that I have a nuclear button on the desk in my office. All of the mainland United States is within the range of our nuclear strike.”

Trump responded the next day with a tweet about size and performance. “I too have a Nuclear Button, but it is a much bigger & more powerful one than his, and my B-61 can work!”

Once they got that out of their system, things quickly improved, helped along by Kim’s letters to Trump, which the U.S. president called “beautiful.” There was no more talk about Trump being a “mentally deranged dotard” or Kim being a “maniac.” In June, they held history’s first meeting between a North Korean leader and a current U.S. president. “We fell in love,” Trump later said at a West Virginia rally.

Kim had previously vowed to visit “fire and fury” on the U.S. but the “Fire and Fury” that made Trump lively early in the year was the book of the same name, Michael Wolff’s insider account of the Trump White House. That was a different sort of missile. The president took particular exception to observations in the book by his former chief strategist, tweeting about “Sloppy Steve Bannon, who cried when he got fired and begged for his job. Now Sloppy Steve has been dumped like a dog by almost everyone. Too bad!”

They are said to be on better terms now.

Over the course of the year, Trump spoke at more than 40 campaign rallies, kept up his Twitter barrage (40,000 tweets since 2009 on his @realDonaldTrump account) and answered plenty of questions in frequent but lengthy news conferences and sit-down interviews.

So what stands out in this blizzardy whitout of unconventionality?

How about this farewell to his secretary of state,

U.S. President Donald Trump shakes hands with North Korea leader Kim Jong Un on June 12, at the Capella resort on Sentosa Island, in Singapore.

Rex Tillerson? “He was dumb as a rock and I couldn’t get rid of him fast enough. He was lazy as hell.” (The president usually reserves “dumb as a rock” for journalists.)

Or his description of Stormy Daniels, paid to stay quiet about their alleged affair, as “horseface?”

Will history long remember that in 2018 the president called Democratic Rep. Adam Schiff “little Adam Schiff” on Twitter and nations in Africa “shithole countries” in a private meeting?

Or that he (correctly) predicted Hurricane Florence would be “tremendously wet” or told the AP: “I have a natural instinct for science?”

In July, Trump appeared to side with Russian President Vladimir Putin when he stood by Putin’s side at a Helsinki summit news conference and gave weight to Putin’s denial that Russia meddled in the 2016 election, despite the firm conclusion of U.S. intelligence agencies that it had. “I don’t see any reason why it would be” Russia, Trump said.

But while it’s been hardly noticed in a capital consumed by the shutdown drama, Mattis, Syria, steel slats and market convulsions, 2018 draws to a close as it started — with warnings of a nuclear Armageddon, this time from Putin.

Putin’s prompt was Trump’s intention to walk away from one arms control treaty and his reluctance to extend another.

That, said Putin, “could lead to the destruction of civilization as a whole and maybe even our planet.”

Maybe he’s just playing hard to get.

2018 in a word: List calls for collusion ban

College releases annual grouping of overused terms

By JEFF KAROUB
Associated Press

DETROIT—No collusion! (Or at least a lot less of it.)

That's according to a Michigan school's latest "List of Words Banished from the Queen's English for Mis-use, Over-use and General Uselessness."

The politically charged term at the center of special prosecutor Robert Mueller's investigation into whether President Donald Trump's campaign coordinated with Russia is among 18 entries on Lake Superior State University's 44th annual list, which was released Monday.

University spokesman John Shibley said the school received about 3,000 votes through its website and Facebook pages. Although Trump has repeatedly tweeted that there was "no collusion" and "collusion" was among the top-three vote-getters — along with "wheelhouse" and "in the books" — its inclusion should not be interpreted as a political statement by the list-makers. Rather, voters apparently were just irritated by hearing and reading the word so often in the past year, he said.

"I can usually read a political nomination when I see it," he said. "If I saw a string of trolls trying to pack the ballot box for political reasons, I would have caught it."

The other words or expressions to make the list are "wrap my head around," "grapple," "optics," "eschew" and "thought leader." Also submitted by the public for the pyre of popular parlance: "platform," "ghosting," "yeet," "litigate," "crusty," "legally drunk," "importantly" and "accoutrements."

Two other political entries also made it: "Most important election of our time" and "OTUS" acronyms such as POTUS — for President of the United States. The acronyms that have found their way onto cable news shows date back to the late 19th century when POTUS and SCOTUS (Supreme Court of the United States) were used as telegraph codes, according to Merriam-Webster. FLOTUS, for the first lady, first appeared in the 1980s.

Among the newest terms — yet one the curators feel has outlived its usefulness — is "yeet," which variously refers to the name of a dance, a taunt, an excited acknowledgement or throwing something. Other words are commonly known in one setting, such as "litigate" among lawyers but get trotted out by some politicians and pundits for hashing out "any matter of controversy," according to one submission.

The list is meant to be in fun, but it's bound to raise some hackles.

There was a "whiff" of legal concern back in 1994 when officials from the Los Angeles Lakers objected to the list's inclusion of "three-peat," Shibley said. The team's coach at the time, Hall of Famer Pat Riley, owned the trademark. Eventually, the team officials dropped their objections after determining that its inclusion on the list wasn't "commercially flagrant."

Some members of the public were upset at the 2002 inclusion of "9-11," which received thousands of votes for banishment, Shibley said. It was deemed by nominators as "too much (of) a shorthand" for the tragic terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, but people misunderstood and thought the school was "thumbing our noses at 9/11," he said.

Shibley said that with the rise of social media and ever-more-divisive politics, people have even "shorter fuses," which means he and his colleagues tread carefully. After all, the aim of the list isn't to inflame but to entertain.

"Hopefully (it) helps diffuse some of the animus out there — not by laughing at ourselves, but by laughing at how language sometimes backs us into some absurdly funny corners," he said.

There's no overlap between this year's list and 2018 word-of-the-year pronouncements by Merriam-Webster ("justice") and Oxford Dictionaries ("toxic").

Looking for U-turns on mean streets

Violence Interrupters hope they can stop crime with open dialogue

By PETER HERMANN
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The boys, barely in their teens, were angry. A young man they knew had been shot dead.

Robbie Merritt was not the first man from around their Southeast Washington neighborhood who had recently been killed. Just the latest.

There was J Rock. Popcorn. Regale. Butter Rock. Black. Carno.

The nicknames were rattled off by Duane Cunningham, a 46-year-old city worker. With a promise of pizza, he had gathered the group of teens at a neighborhood recreation center on a rainy fall evening to talk about life in this sliver of neighborhoods in the far southern tip of the District and about what would come next.

His looming — yet unstated — question to the group: Were there threats to avenge Robbie's death? "Have any of you ever felt like you need to have a gun in your life?" he asked.

A smattering of hands went up. "Get him before he gets me," said a ninth-grader, his voice barely audible, the studs in his ears gleaming under a hoodie pulled up over his head.

Whether youthful swagger or simple fact, the ease and proficiency in which the 14-year-old and his friends talked about guns shows how much a part of life they are in some city neighborhoods. Cunningham pressed the teen for more.

The former drug dealer has reinvented himself as one of more than a dozen "Violence Interrupters" in the District, trying to stop shootings before they happen. It is a tough job with homicides mounting and approaching the number reached in 2015, when a summer surge of shootings ended nearly a decade of declines in killings.

Inside the safe confines of the Ferebee Hope Recreation Center, the youth shrugged in the direction of the front door, where a security guard clad in body armor and distracted by his smartphone stood sentry.

Outside, drab low-slung public housing cubes stretched on in Washington Highlands, known here by the name of one notorious street — Condon Terrace.

Out there, the boys said, they needed to protect themselves.

Out there, the 14-year-old said, "It's real."

Cunningham grew up in Anacostia and sold drugs along Good Hope Road during the 1980s crack epidemic.

He was 18 the first time he was locked up, the same year he dropped out of high school. He went to prison in 1990, the year then-Mayor Marion Barry was arrested smoking crack, the year 474 people were slain in the District during its most murderous era. Cunningham served 10 years in prison, most of them in the long-closed Lorton prison.

The father of five said he did what he had to do to get by, but he also "regrets that I helped destroy my community."

With a stocky build, black or multicolored kuffi and a flash of the heavy silver chain he wears to mark his prison conversion to Islam, Cunningham exudes the cred of a man who has occupied city blocks and cell blocks. While he was selling drugs and in prison, people called him "Cousin Wayne." The nickname stuck.

These days, he starts work after commuters have gone home, drawing up to $45,000 a year as one of 18 Violence Interrupters, the District's new front line in combating violence. The program is part of the Office of Neighborhood Safety and Engagement, launched in 2017 as Mayor Muriel E. Bowser's $5.4 million yearly investment to combat crime in ways traditional police cannot.

Cunningham interacts very little with police. A school resource officer may tip him off to a fight that could escalate outside the classroom, but he does not investigate crime or help those who do.

"My job is to make sure it don't go no further," he said.

Similar initiatives have been started in Baltimore, Chicago and some other cities.

Duane Cunningham is a member of DC's Violence Interrupters in Washington. The group imbeds in violent DC neighborhoods to try and stop shootings before they happen.

'It's tough out there, but at the end of the day, they don't have to live this life. They just don't know it.'

Duane Cunningham

A member of DC's Violence Interrupters

The impact is hard to measure — a dispute quieted, anger channeled elsewhere, retaliation that is never carried out. But city leaders hope small success stories eventually will show up in the broader violent crime numbers, which for now are trending the wrong way.

So Cunningham and the other interrupters spend time in neighborhoods, talking and listening.

Cunningham drives around in his used 2001 black Chevrolet Tahoe, now burdened with 322,000 miles, hitting the hot spots — back alleys and streets — finding ways to connect with people.

"It's tough out here, but at the end of the day, they don't have to live this life," Cunningham said. "They just don't know it. Their dad is in jail. Their moms are spending their checks on the street. These kids are trying to feed their families. It's not like they woke up one morning and said, 'I'm going to kill somebody.'"

Cunningham says his generation let down the one that followed. "A lot of us went to jail, so we weren't here to take care of our kids," he said. "The kids thought this was the best way to live because they saw us making all this money back in the day."

When the young people listen, he said, he tells them about various programs the District offers, even to felons, to get their lives on track.

Two men who knew Cunningham from his old days looked on.

Bryan Williams, who grew up in Anacostia, summed up the challenge:

"He got to get in the hotheads' heads."

The Benning Terrace field is more than a place to play football. It is a safe haven between rival neighborhoods.

So one night in early November, kids ages 5 to 14, who make up the three football teams, picked up signs instead of gear.

Cunningham organized a march through the hidden pathways and cuts of Simple City, the name of a ruthless gang from the '90s that has long defined this place.

"Let me live in Peace," one placard read.

"What has violence solved? Nothing," read another.

Five miles away, at the Ferebee Hope Recreation Center, the group of teens confronted the divisions and alliances that often sparked violence.

"What happens when you go to their store?" Cunningham asked the group.

"You get shot," a young man answered.

"What happens when they come to your store?" Cunningham asked.

"They get shot," the same boy answered.

Cunningham has met with these young men before, one-on-one, pressing each to take advantage of programs offered through the city, the schools and the recreation center. This day, he challenged their tough talk.

"What do loafing mean?" Cunningham asked.

"Like you're beefing. All tens," the 14-year-old answered.

"Tell me what all tens means?"

"Be prepared."

"Where your gun gonna be at?"

The youth formed his right hand into a gun and held it next to his waistband.

But Cunningham had brought in a ringer: Tameka Merritt, Robert "Robbie" Merritt's mother, was listening. Robbie had been shot in October at age 26. He hung out at the rec center, too, and all the teens knew him.

She jumped in.

"You all really need to get it together," the 47-year-old told them, her voice rising. "You know who's carrying guns around here. You know who they want to beat up. Get away from them."

Cunningham told them to be smart and stay away from trouble. That means staying away from the store. The corners. Older boys with guns. Weed. The dark.

He asked them about Robbie and the others. "When they woke up that morning, did they think they was gonna die that day? How do you know you're not going to die tomorrow?"

The teen in the hoodie answered.

"I don't think they knew they were gonna die, but it happens here."

Tameka Merritt, who lost two sons to violence, talks to youths at the Ferebee Hope Recreation Center in Washington.

Section of Russian apartment caves in; at least 4 killed

Associated Press

MOSCOW — At least four people died Monday when sections of an apartment building collapsed after an apparent gas explosion in Russia's Ural Mountains region, officials said, and hundreds of rescuers are searching for survivors under the debris.

The authorities said five people were hospitalized with injuries, and 38 other residents remained unaccounted for in the accident in Magnitogorsk, a city of 400,000 people about 870 miles southeast of Moscow.

The nation's top investigative committee, the Investigative Committee, said the collapse of a section of the 10-story building was apparently caused by a gas leak. It happened before dawn when most residents were still asleep on New Year's Eve.

Nearly 1,400 rescuers were searching for those who could have been buried under debris in temperatures of 1.4 degrees Fahrenheit, which were forecast to plunge to -17 degrees Fahrenheit overnight. Emergency officials admitted they were racing against time as the frigid weather reduces the chances to find anyone alive.

Local authorities initially said 68 of those registered in the collapsed section of the building were unaccounted for, but they later tracked down some of them.

Magnitogorsk Mayor Sergei Berdnikov told the Tass news agency that 38 people are still missing, adding that it wasn't clear if they were in the building when it collapsed.

Emergency workers have evacuated residents of nearby sections of the building, fearing they could also tumble down.

The Kremlin said President Vladimir Putin has been briefed on the situation. Cabinet officials arrived in Magnitogorsk to oversee the rescue efforts.

Gas explosions in Russian homes and businesses are common, and they are usually blamed on neglect of safety rules or poor maintenance.

US citizen arrested on spying charges in Russia

MOSCOW — Russia's domestic security agency says it has arrested a U.S. citizen on espionage charges.

The Federal Security Service, or FSB, the top KGB successor agency, said the American man was detained in Moscow on Friday. The agency said in Monday's statement that he was caught "during an espionage operation," but didn't give any details.

The state Tass news agency identified the detained man as Paul Whelan. Spying charges carry a prison sentence of up to 20 years in Russia.

The U.S. Embassy in Moscow had no immediate comment.

The arrest comes as Russia-U.S. ties have sunk to post-Cold War lows over the Ukrainian crisis, the war in Syria and the allegations of Russian meddling in the 2016 U.S. presidential election.

Congo counts ballots in presidential election

KINSHASA, Congo — Congo's election officials are counting votes Monday in a presidential election that the opposition and observers say has had numerous irregularities.

The ballot counting and compiling is taking place across the vast Central African country after an election day beset by problems but in which many Congolese showed a calm determination to register their votes.

Election observers reported multiple difficulties in voting for a successor to President Joseph Kabila, who is stepping down after 17 years in power. The election had been delayed since late 2016, prompting the opposition to charge that Kabila was trying to stay on past his mandate.

Congo's presidential election is hoped to be the country's first peaceful, democratic transfer of power since independence from Belgium in 1960. The official results are to be announced on Jan. 15, although preliminary results are expected before then.

Life resumed to normal in Kinshasa, the capital, after voting day, during which electoral officials rushed voting lists to polling stations across the city. Many polls stayed open in the night to allow those waiting in line to cast their ballots.

Among some 21 candidates, top opposition leaders Martin Fayulu and Felix Tshisekedi are challenging Kabila's preferred successor, former Interior Minister Emmanuel Ramazani Shadary, who is under European Union sanctions for a crackdown on people protesting election delays.

Bomb blast at Philippine mall kills at least 2

Associated Press

COTABATO, Philippines — Suspected Muslim militants remotely detonated a bomb near the entrance of a mall in the southern Philippines on Monday as people did last-minute shopping ahead of New Year's Eve celebrations, killing at least two and wounding nearly 30, officials said.

The bomb went off near a baggage counter at the entrance of the South Seas mall in Cotabato city, wounding shoppers, vendors and commuters. Authorities recovered another unexploded bomb nearby as government forces imposed a security lockdown in the city, military and police officials said.

Maj. Gen. Cirilito Sobejana said by phone that an initial investigation showed the design of the bomb was similar to those used in the past by local Muslim militants who have pledged allegiance to Islamic State.

RAINIER CANOSO/AP

Investigators examine the South Seas Mall in Cotabato, southern Philippines, following an explosion on New Year's Eve on Monday.

Government forces launched an offensive against the militants belonging to a group called Daulah Islamiyah last week, and at least seven of the militants died in the fighting, Sobejana said.

"This is a part of the retaliation, but the problem is they're victimizing innocent civilians," he told reporters.

Superintendent Romeo Galgo Jr., the deputy police director of Cotabato, said witnesses saw a man leave a box in a crowded area near the mall's entrance where vendors and shoppers were milling. The explosion shattered glass panels and scattered debris to the street fronting the mall.

Two of the roughly 30 people hit by the blast died while being brought to a hospital, Sobejana said.

Cotabato Mayor Cynthia Guinani-Sayadi condemned the bombing and called on residents to help fight terrorism.

"This is not just another terroristic act but an act against humanity. I cannot fathom how such evil exists in this time of merry-making," she said.

"It is unimaginable how some people can start the new year with an act of cruelty. But no matter how you threaten us, the people of Cotabato are resilient. ... We will stand up against terrorism," she told reporters.

The bombing is the latest in a number of attacks blamed on militants in the volatile region.

Bangladesh ruling coalition declared winner of disputed election

Associated Press

DHAKA, Bangladesh — Bangladesh's ruling alliance won virtually every parliamentary seat in the country's general election, according to official results released Monday, giving Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina a third straight term despite allegations of intimidation and the opposition disputing the outcome.

The coalition led by Hasina's Awami League party won 288 out of 300 seats — 96 percent — in Sunday's polls. Election Commission Secretary Hetal Uddin Ahmed said. The opposition alliance led by prominent lawyer

Kamal Hossain won only seven seats.

The opposition rejected the outcome, with Hossain calling the election "farical" and demanding a new election be held under the authority of a "nonpartisan government."

But Chief Election Commissioner K.M. Nurul Huda ruled out any revoke, saying there were no reports of large irregularities.

"There is no scope to hold the election again," Huda said. He said the turnout in Sunday's vote was 80 percent.

Hasina's main rival for decades has been former Prime Minister

Khaleda Zia, the leader of the opposition Bangladesh Nationalist Party, whom a court deemed ineligible to run for office because she is in prison for alleged corruption.

In Zia's absence, opposition parties formed a coalition led by Hossain, 82, a former member of Hasina's Awami League.

OPINION

If we ease up, ISIS could attack us again

By MICHAEL MORELL
AND MIKE VICKERS

Special to The Washington Post

We were both deeply involved in our nation's fight against al-Qaida and its early fight against Islamic State, and we both believe it is imperative that President Donald Trump remember what we consider to be the most important lesson of counterterrorism — the ability of a terrorist group to quickly regenerate if the pressure on it is reduced. The pattern is clear: If we do not keep the pressure on ISIS and other groups, we believe we will again face a threat to our homeland.

We saw this pattern repeatedly during our careers — always with potentially devastating consequences. When the United States drove al-Qaida out of Afghanistan in the fall of 2001, the group went to prearranged safe houses in the urban areas of Pakistan, where it continued to conduct aggressive attack planning. Over the next year, the CIA, with the assistance of Pakistani intelligence, systematically captured many al-Qaida members, including a number of the group's senior leaders, and significantly reduced the group's capabilities to attack us.

The remnants of al-Qaida then moved again, this time in 2003 to tribal areas of Pakistan — in a remote region along the Afghanistan-Pakistan border where the Pakistani government has limited control, and where the group was no longer under pressure from the U.S. or Pakistani governments.

Without that pressure, the group's capabilities to attack us rebounded. By the summer of 2005, al-Qaida directed and organized the July 2005 London bombings. And by the summer of 2006, al-Qaida was able again to catastrophically attack the United States. Only excellent work by the U.S., British and Pakistani intelligence services prevented a plan to detonate explosives on 10 to 15 airliners traveling to the United States from London's Heathrow Airport. In response, the George W. Bush administration began, and the Obama administration continued, an aggressive, five-year counterterrorism operation along the Afghanistan-Pakistan border that significantly weakened al-Qaida.

A similar dynamic took place in Yemen. In the aftermath of 9/11, an al-Qaida-associated group there grew in size and threat — the outgrowth of a senior al-Qaida leader fleeing South Asia for the Arabian Peninsula. It conducted several attacks. The United States, working with the Yemeni government, was able to bring the group under control by arresting and imprisoning most of its leadership. But then a massive prison break in February 2006 allowed the group to re-establish itself.

Within 24 months of the prison break, al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula — or AQAP, as it is known — was again a threat to the West, conducting two attacks on the U.S. Embassy in Sanaa in 2008, nearly bringing down a U.S. airliner flying to Detroit on a flight over the Arabian Peninsula in close to detonating sophisticated explosives packed in printer cartridges on two U.S. cargo flights in 2010, and nearly putting an individual wearing a nonmetallic suicide vest on a U.S. aircraft in 2011. The Obama administration acted quickly, weakening the group with a military campaign, an operation that continues today.

ISIS was, in part, an outgrowth of the withdrawal of U.S. forces from Iraq at the end of 2011. When the U.S. military departed the country, al-Qaida in Iraq (AQI), the predecessor organization to ISIS, was largely — although not completely — defeated, the work of the Bush and Obama administrations, along with the support of the Iraqi government. When we left, there were only a few thousand AQI members remaining, most of them in hiding.

Without U.S. military support, AQI began to bounce back almost immediately. It grew because the Iraqi military was much less effective without U.S. support; because the Iraqi prime minister at the time, Nouri al-Maliki, was reluctant to accept U.S. intelligence support; and because al-Maliki, freed of U.S. oversight, became more sectarian and authoritarian, alienating Iraqi Sunnis and driving them toward AQI. By the time of the Syrian civil war and AQI's journey across the border to join the fight, the group, now calling itself ISIS, was so capable that it dominated the Syrian battlefield, where it gained even more strength.

What does this key lesson mean for today? It means the U.S. must continue to keep the pressure on the tens of thousands of ISIS members who remain in Iraq and Syria. It means we need to do the same in Afghanistan, where the remnants of al-Qaida work closely with the resurgent Taliban. And it means we must keep the pressure on al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula in Yemen.

If we do not do these things, the U.S. will face, in a short period of time, a dangerous threat from these groups, to include a threat to the homeland. As he makes decisions regarding the Middle East and South Asia, President Trump needs to consider the regenerative capability of these groups if he is to fulfill his No. 1 responsibility: protecting the American people.

Washington Post contributing columnist Michael Morell was CIA deputy director from 2010 to 2013 and twice acting director during that time. Mike Vickers is a former Special Forces officer and CIA operations officer. He served in the George W. Bush and Obama administrations, including as undersecretary of defense for intelligence.

Japan-US missile defense effort has strategic value

By ARTHUR L. CYR

Special to Stars and Stripes

The United States has carried out a successful test of an advanced land-based anti-missile system (ABM). This triumph on Dec. 10, quickly announced publicly by the U.S. Missile Defense Agency, has remained largely under the radar of global media preoccupied with markets and trade conflicts, along with political debates largely removed from military defense and security. That is unfortunate.

A U.S. land-based Raytheon Aegis missile intercepted an intermediate-range ballistic missile in flight. The test occurred near Hawaii in the Pacific Ocean. The highly sophisticated missile results from a large-scale joint project with Japan. North Korea's long-term development of weapons has heightened tensions in and around the Korean Peninsula. In response, the U.S. in 2009 deployed a Lockheed Martin THAAD (Terminal High Altitude Air Defense) anti-missile system to protect Hawaii, a possible target. There have been similar tensions in Europe in relation to Russia.

In September 2017, the U.S. put a THAAD system in South Korea. THAAD has more limited area coverage than Aegis.

"Hitting a bullet with a bullet" is the way even proponents of anti-missile systems describe the extraordinary technical challenge. Yet there have been sustained pressures within the U.S. to build such weapons for more than a half century, dating back to the 1950s and the Eisenhower administration. At that time, defense spending absorbed more than half the entire federal budget, and a much larger percentage of gross domestic product than today. President Dwight D. Eisenhower maintained control over the military primarily, though not exclusively, by putting an overall ceiling on the Pentagon budget, effectively setting the Air Force, Army and Navy against one another for available resources.

The efforts of the Army to remain a significant participant in atomic weapons at times took rather unusual forms. One of the most bizarre nuclear weapons ever developed was the M65 atomic cannon, nicknamed "Atomic Annie" for obscure reasons, though perhaps derived from the nickname "Anzio Annie" given to a pair of devastating German K5 guns deployed against the Allied invasion of Italy in World War II. The U.S. first fielded the atomic cannon in 1953 and deployed the weapon in Western Europe and South Korea. The enormous size of the cannon may have intimidated Cold War opponents but definitely created public relations challenges for local U.S. army personnel. Especially in West Germany, there were regularly complaints resulting from buildings and other structures sideswiped or crushed by the big guns.

One byproduct of the Eisenhower approach was considerable duplication of effort. Each service developed a separate strategic missile program, jealously guarding research and development information from the others. Defense Secretary Robert McNamara in the Kennedy administration was instantly offended by the lack of logic in this approach and decisively imposed organization-chart order. The Air Force was given land-based strategic missiles, the Navy sea-based submarine systems, and the Army was removed from the game. The secretary and his civilian analysts also rejected arguments for anti-ballistic missiles because any conceivable defensive systems could be overwhelmed at relatively low cost by simply increasing the number of attack vehicles. Under then-prevalent U.S. strategic concepts, hardening missile sites was not a particularly effective solution. That was not. If a nuclear Pearl Harbor was being planned, there was no point in protecting missile launchers that would be empty.

McNamara's policies and style quickly unified the services against him. The Air Force was the primary force for an ABM role. When President Lyndon Johnson forced the secretary to resign, he made him president of the World Bank but also insisted on public support for the ABM.

President Ronald Reagan gave priority to exotic space-based missile interceptors, termed the Strategic Defense Initiative or "Star Wars." The Air Force became the leading service but the entire Joint Chiefs of Staff endorsed the effort. Reagan and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger were prime exponents.

Anti-missile deployments in Asia and Europe were given threats from North Korea and elsewhere. In the late 1960s, nuclear weapons strategist Herman Kahn emphasized dangers from such rogue states, partly to support the publicly humiliated McNamara.

Additionally, there are potential positive opportunities in the current missile situation. South Korea as well as Japan and the U.S. may develop expanded diplomatic as well as security cooperation, including and reaching well beyond North Korea.

Fires, shootings appear to be part of family feud

MS MONTICELLO — A southwest Mississippi sheriff said a family feud appears to have spurred multiple shootings and two fires over the last week.

No one's been reported injured, but Lawrence County Sheriff Lessie Butler told The Daily Leader of Brookhaven that he fears violence will lead to someone dying. The problem, Butler said, is that no one will tell his deputies who's responsible.

The trouble began Dec. 21 with reports of shots fired in the Oma community, about 12 miles north of Monticello. Then a home burned down early the next morning. More shots were reported later that morning, and a mobile home burned on Christmas.

Then last Wednesday, deputies were told a crowd had gathered at the first fire's site, but no one was around when authorities arrived.

Suspect in theft does TV interview, arrested

NY ROCHESTER — A New York bartender's TV interview led to his arrest after sheriff's deputies recognized him as the suspect in a grand larceny case.

The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle reported that Anthony Lamarca was arrested Friday after appearing on WUHF's "Good Day Rochester" the day before.

The Ontario County Sheriff's Office said Lamarca had been wanted for third-degree grand larceny for more than a year.

Lamarca was interviewed for a segment about the New Year's Eve party at the Rochester restaurant where he works.

Dog alerts sleeping owners of house fire

NH BARNSTEAD — Officials say a dog saved a New Hampshire couple when a fire swept through a home that had no working smoke detectors in the town of Barnstead.

Deputy Fire Chief John Drew said the occupants were sound asleep but were alerted to the impending disaster by their deaf dog.

He said the entire house was ablaze by the time firefighters arrived early Saturday, and he told WMUR-TV: "That dog saved their life."

Drew said several other pets died in the blaze and the home was destroyed.

SC FORT MILL — A South Carolina man said some swift kicks and stomps saved him from a coyote attack.

John Somjak said he was taking corn cobs to a wildlife camera he set up in the woods behind a friend's home in Fort Mill when the coyote ran toward him at about 4:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Somjak told The Herald, of Rock Hill, that he dropped the

The Racine County Sheriff's Office said Friday that the man was pulled over after a deputy paced him driving 100 mph. An investigation showed that the man had seven previous operating while intoxicated convictions and a revoked driving status. Officials say the man also had a felony warrant. Authorities say he followed requests to complete a field sobriety test and was then arrested for his eighth intoxicated driving offense.

Providing cover for man's best friend

Kenny Trail and his dog, Rocky, head down Gay Avenue near Gallmeyer's Pumpkin Patch in Henrico County, Va., on Friday as heavy rain moved through the area. Trail said he and Rocky have been "homeless," not homeless, for about seven years and usually sleep in the tent he carries. He said he was a first-class transmission lineman for 20 years before he decided to take up his current lifestyle.

sack of corn cobs but the coyote ignored it and kept coming.

So Somjak said he kicked the animal under the chin and stomped it several times. He thought it was dead, but after returning to get a knife, the coyote charged him again. Somjak said he used the knife to kill the animal.

Wind knocks over tree at park, killing woman

TN GATLINBURG — A woman from Texas was killed by a tree knocked down by high winds in Great Smoky Mountains National Park in Tennessee.

Park spokesman Mike Litterst said Saturday that Laila Jiwani, 42, was hiking with her husband and three children on Porter Creek Trail on Thursday when the tree fell.

Litterst said one of the children was injured. The spokesman said the 6-year-old was airlifted to a hospital with injuries that weren't life-threatening.

In a Facebook post, Jiwani's husband, Taufiq, wrote that their son suffered a broken leg and superficial head injuries during a "simple/safe" hike.

Inmate who escaped from prison caught

CA SAN QUENTIN — California authorities on a nearly four-day manhunt for an inmate who walked away from San Quentin State Prison captured him Saturday.

Officials from the state Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation said they took Shalom Mendoza, 21, into custody at a fast-food restaurant without incident. He was taken to the Salinas Valley State Prison.

A resident alerted authorities after seeing Mendoza at the restaurant in Paso Robles, more than 200 miles southeast of the prison.

He's suspected of carjacking a vehicle in a store parking lot less than a mile from the prison after fleeing a work assignment outside the prison walls. He was reported missing at just after 9:30 p.m. last Wednesday.

140 people evacuated from chairlift at resort

MT KALISPELL — A Montana ski resort says it safely evacuated 140 people from a chairlift after a mechanical problem prompted operators to stop the lift.

The Flathead Beacon reported that it took 2½ hours to remove everyone from Whitefish Mountain Resort's Chair 5 on Saturday.

Resort officials said they decided to evacuate the passengers because of the time the repairs would require.

Some of people were lowered from the lift with cables and harnesses. Resort officials said temperatures were in the high teens and winds were blowing at about 10 mph at the time.

The resort said no one was injured. The ski patrol carried out the evacuation.

Marker for lynching spot vandalized again

GA VALDOSTA — A marker identifying the location of one of the most gruesome lynchings in Georgia history has been vandalized for a second time.

The Valdosta Daily Times reported the Mary Turner and the Lynching Rampage historical marker was riddled with bullet holes for the second time in five years. An email sent to the newspaper Thursday by Mark Patrick George, Mary Turner Project coordinator, said the marker was shot 13 times in the last two to three months. It was shot five times in July 2013.

The marker is dedicated to 13 lynching victims killed in Lowndes and Brooks counties.

These movie villains entertained us with their evil ways in 2018

By SONIA RAO ■ The Washington Post

Just when you thought you'd seen the last of these year-end pop culture lists, we throw another one at you. Sorry! We can't help it. Some of the characters below made us scream. Some of them made us laugh. All of them made us wonder whether it's actually more fun for actors to play the bad guys. So before we meet next year's Hot Jafar or evil Jake Gyllenhaal, let us take a moment to revisit the 10 best movie villains of 2018, ordered alphabetically by movie title.

Warning: Some of the blurbs below contain spoilers. Villainy strikes again!

Thanos (Josh Brolin) in 'Avengers: Infinity War'

Thanos excels at accumulating shiny stones that contain ridiculous amounts of power. With a single snap of his fingers, he can obliterate half the universe's population. If Captain America and his powerful beard cannot stop you, we're not sure anyone can.

Erik Killmonger (Michael B. Jordan) in 'Black Panther'

King T'Challa chooses to uphold Wakanda's isolationist policies to keep its citizens safe, but his American cousin Erik Killmonger, who aims to liberate black people worldwide, sees this as selfish. Some argued that Killmonger's ideals — if not his extreme hunger for power — were admirable.

Ben (Steven Yeun) in 'Burning'

"Burning" is well-written, but Steven Yeun's acting is what landed Ben — a mysterious rich man who serves as romantic rival to the film's protagonist — on this list. Ben's every action is effortlessly sinister, even when he isn't talking about his habit of burning down abandoned greenhouses.

Robert Harley (Nicholas Hoult) in 'The Favourite'

Robert Harley's 18th-century calculating politician does all the things traditional bad guys do — and well: He manipulates the lead characters by exploiting their weaknesses, ticks them off with snippy digs, and does it all in fabulously elaborate costumes.

Joan (Ann Dowd) in 'Hereditary'

For how kind Ann Dowd seems in real life, she sure does a good job of terrifying audiences. The veteran actress, who won an Emmy last year for playing the wicked Aunt Lydia in "The Handmaid's Tale," is believably possessed by a devilish spirit over the course of "Hereditary." Joan wasn't technically the horror flick's main villain, but we wouldn't drink tea at her home anytime soon.

August Walker (Henry Cavill) in 'Mission: Impossible - Fallout'

The big and actually surprising reveal of "Fallout" is that CIA agent August Walker is actually John Lark, a man who aims to kill off a large portion of the world's population. "There cannot be peace without, first, a great suffering," Lark states in a manifesto that could easily have been written by Thanos. Cavill's excellent deadpan makes his villainy all the more unsettling, proof that it does the actor well to step away from playing a caped superhero every so often.

Phoenix Buchanan (Hugh Grant) in 'Paddington 2'

Some of the best villains are those who surprise you, and "Paddington 2" features Hugh Grant, of all people, skulking around in a nun's costume while plotting against an innocent Peruvian bear. He also leads a song-and-dance number that takes place in a pastel-colored prison. Need we say more?

Steve Lift (Armie Hammer) in 'Sorry to Bother You'

"Sorry to Bother You," about a black telemarketer who speaks in his "white voice" to achieve professional success, is very ambitious in the number of social issues it attempts to tackle, and the evils of capitalism rank high. Armie Hammer plays Steve Lift, the psychopathic CEO of a morally bankrupt company, the most 2018 villain of all.

— essentially,

Venom (Tom Hardy) in 'Venom'

"Venom" is among the most ridiculous movies of 2018, emphasized by the dialogue between journalist Eddie Brock (Tom Hardy) and the alien parasite that merges with his body. But that's also what makes it so great. Between the parasite telling Eddie that he, too, was a "loser" on his home planet — we love an underdog! — and his accidental voice in Eddie's head nears the intensity of Christian Bale's Batman voice, Venom carries what might be one of the most enjoyable bad movies of recent film history.

Jatemme Manning (Daniel Kaluuya) in 'Widows'

Daniel Kaluuya's character Jatemme is ruthless, willing to do whatever it takes to keep Chicago mobsters loyal to his crime boss brother, Jamal, who is running for city council. As we learned with "Get Out," Kaluuya has perfected the art of conveying emotion — or a lack thereof, in Jatemme's case — through his eyes, rather than just his words.

'Aquaman' still swimming strong between holidays

Associated Press

In the final weekend of 2018, "Aquaman" still led the pack at the box office, but other films like "Mary Poppins Returns," "The Mule" and "Second Act" enjoyed post-holiday bumps too, even amid an onslaught of new Christmas offerings like "Vice," "Holmes and Watson" and "On the Basis of Sex."

Warner Bros. said Sunday that "Aquaman" added an estimated $51.6 million in North American ticket sales over the weekend to take first place again. Down just 24 percent from its domestic debut, the DC Comics pic, which has been No. 1 internationally for four weeks, has now grossed nearly $748.8 million worldwide.

Although other films in theaters were left in "Aquaman's" wake, more than a few in the top 10 experienced an uncommon uptick in returns this weekend. Disney's "Mary Poppins Returns" ended the weekend up an estimated 19 percent, in second place, with $28 million, while "Bumblebee," down only five percent, settled in third with $20.5 million.

Up 11 percent, "Spider-Man: Into the Spider-Verse" got fourth with $18.3 million, and "The Mule," up 24 percent, took fifth with $11.8 million.

The Jennifer Lopez-led "Second Act," which got off to a slow start last weekend, also found itself up 11 percent, with $7.2 million in seventh place. But the biggest bump of all came from Disney's "Ralph Breaks the Internet," which was up nearly 40 percent in its sixth weekend in theaters, with $6.5 million.

"Vice," starring Christian Bale as the former Vice President, came out on top for the newbies, grossing $7.8 million from the weekend and $17.7 million since its Christmas opening.

Driven by the star power of Will Ferrell and John C. Reilly, "Holmes and Watson" managed to take in $7.3 million despite negative audience and critic reviews. The Sony film has grossed $19.7 million since Christmas Day. And in limited release, the Ruth Bader Ginsburg film "On the Basis of Sex" starring Felicity Jones grossed $690,000 from 33 locations for a total of $1.5 million since its debut.

Worth a look

BY ROBERT DUFFER
Chicago Tribune

After the third drive in the excellent all-new 2019 Genesis G70 compact sedan, a memory from the 2016 Chicago Auto Show floor returned. Overheard was one dude saying to another dude, "There's Hyundai." And the other dude scoffed and said, "Why bother," as if it were 30 years earlier when the South Korean automaker broke into the American market with the low-quality, budget Excel. I wanted to tell Dude how much Hyundai had evolved, but Dude was confident he was right.

And he must not have made the connection when, later on the show floor, he and almost everyone else was gawking at the automaker's stunning concept: the Genesis Vision G luxury coupe.

There was a lot of skepticism then about Hyundai launching a distinct luxury brand, as Honda had done with Acura, Nissan with Infiniti and Toyota with Lexus. It takes a long time to correct that skepticism. Roughly three years in with a third model out, the Genesis G70 compact sedan announces without a doubt that the Genesis brand makes very good cars.

Unfortunately, for now, Hyundai doesn't make a crossover, but another one of those is the last thing the market needs. Yet the market doesn't really want cars, either, so the G90 full-size sedan and G80 midsize sedan probably didn't worry the established premium and luxury automakers. But the G70 should.

As long as there is a 3-Series, there will be a market for sporty compact sedans that crossovers can't touch. The G70 hits all the right marks, with handling that makes you smile, and acceleration that makes you forget any worries you may be escaping or approaching. And, in a direct shot at the Germans and all the other luxury players, the options are streamlined into simple, loaded packages.

2019 Genesis G70 is for real — and other luxury automakers better take notice

Genesis knows everything has to be well-executed to turn consumers away from the established luxury players, so the little things matter.

Take this particular small thing that charmed every passenger, from retiree to grade-schooler. On the inside part of the passenger's seat, above and across the center console, are two buttons to slide the seat forward, or fold the seatback. The driver or the rear seat passenger can press it without much effort. It gets people — and especially kids — in and out of the rear seat easier without scuffing that beautiful white quilted interior trim. But it also lets the driver move the seat back when picking up larger passengers. It's such a small thing, but such a lovely convenience.

The G70 looks sharp without trying too hard to stand out. A broad honeycomb grille complements the long hood and short overhangs for a low, muscular profile. The high beltline and coupe-like roofline nip some headroom in the rear seats for the sake of dynamic design. In short, the car looks good, and you'll look good getting in and out of it.

Genesis carries what it calls "athletic elegance" into the inside. Quilted nappa leather seats and door panels blend with the brushed aluminum trim pieces to create a sophisticated cabin that isn't ostentatious. The only Hyundai family resemblance is the infotainment system, which is simple to use and not overburdened with sub-menus. This easy-to-use effectiveness applies to high-fidelity voice commands and advanced driver assistance systems including adaptive cruise control and lane keep assist.

The real charm is behind the wheel. The 365-horsepower 3.3-liter twin turbo V-6 with a smooth, eight-speed automatic (six-speed manual is optional on four-cylinder rear-wheel drive) in all-wheel drive packs a potent and efficient punch. The various drive modes from eco to sport adjust throttle response, so it doesn't take much to floor it in sport mode and hit 60 mph in 4.5 seconds, according to Genesis. It's essentially the same powertrain as the larger, heavier Kia Stinger.

Turbo lag is minimal, steering is direct and the G70 soaks up the road while still staying close to it. There's no lean but plenty of mean in the G70 with Prestige trim.

The question is whether it exceeds the class benchmark, the BMW 3-Series. The new M340i is a tad quicker but expected to be about $10,000 more. But whatever the case, if you're in the market for a luxury sport sedan, checking out the G70 is worth your while. Don't be that dude hung up on dated misconceptions.

Timberwolves center Karl-Anthony Towns drives to the basket as Heat center Bam Adebayo defends during the second half of Sunday's game in Miami. Towns scored 34 in Minnesota's 113-104 win.

Roundup

Towns, T-olves top Heat

Associated Press

MIAMI — Karl-Anthony Towns scored 34 points and grabbed 18 rebounds, leading six Minnesota players in double figures as the Timberwolves defeated the Miami Heat 113-104 on Sunday night.

Towns added seven assists and six blocked shots for the Timberwolves. The only other player in NBA history to have that many points, rebounds, assists and blocks in the same game was Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, for the Los Angeles Lakers against Phoenix on Nov. 14, 1975. Abdul-Jabbar had 35 points, 19 rebounds, nine assists and eight blocks in that game.

Robert Covington scored 16 and Taj Gibson added 14 for Minnesota. The Wolves also got 13 apiece from Andrewiggins and Dario Saric, while Tyus Jones scored 12.

Dwyane Wade led Miami with 21 points. Josh Richardson scored 17, Derrick Jones Jr. added 16 and Hassan Whiteside grabbed 13 rebounds for the Heat.

Raptors 95, Bulls 89: Kawhi Leonard scored 27 points, Pascal Siakam had 20 points and 12 rebounds and host Toronto recorded its seventh straight win over Chicago.

Danny Green and Fred VanVleet each scored 10 points as the Raptors bounced back from their largest defeat of the season, a 29-point loss at Orlando on Friday.

Frustrated Markkanen had 18 points and 10 rebounds and Wendell Carter Jr. had 16 points and 11 rebounds for the Bulls, who didn't score for the first 3:19 of the fourth quarter.

Chicago's Zach LaVine fouled out with 13 points. It was a poor shooting night for LaVine, who went 3-for-17, including 0-for-3 from three-point range.

Magic 109, Pistons 107: Evan Fournier's running jumper in the lane as the buzzer sounded gave Orlando a win over visiting Detroit.

Fournier's winning basket ended a final finish in which Detroit wiped out an eight-point deficit in the final three minutes only to lose for the 11th time in their last 14 games.

Mavericks 105, Thunder 103: Teenage rookie Luka Donic scored 25 points and young backcourt mate Dennis Smith Jr. hit the go-ahead layup in the final minute for host Dallas.

Paul George scored the last 13 points for Oklahoma City and finished with 36, but he missed a pull-up jumper over Smith with 2 seconds left in the first of two straight meetings on back-to-back nights for these regional rivals.

STEVE DYKES/AP

The Trail Blazers' C.J. McCollum, right, hits a shot over the Philadelphia 76ers' Mikale Miller on Sunday in Portland, Ore. McCollum made four three-pointers while going 13-for-18 from the floor to lead the Blazers in a 129-95 win.

Trail Blazers 129, 76ers 95: C.J. McCollum scored 35 points to break out of a brief shooting slump and Portland topped visiting Philadelphia.

Ben Simmons scored 19 points to lead the 76ers, who were without center Joel Embiid due to soreness in his left knee.

Lakers 121, Kings 114: Kentavious Caldwell-Pope scored a season-high 26 points, Josh Hart added 22 and host Los Angeles won for the first time since LeBron James was sidelined with a groin injury.

Brandon Ingram added 21 points, including seven during the game-deciding run. The Kings led 110-103 with 4:30 remaining when the Lakers scored 12 straight points over a three minute span.

Slumping UCLA fires Aford

By BETH HARRIS
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Steve Aford has been fired as UCLA basketball coach after six seasons, with the Bruins mired in a four-game slide that included losses at home to Belmont and Liberty.

Athletic director Dan Guerrero said Monday that assistant Murray Bartow will serve as interim coach through the end of the season.

UCLA is 7-6 and in danger of missing the NCAA Tournament despite a talented roster that includes sophomore Kris Wilkes and freshman Moses Brown.

Aford's final game was a 73-58 loss to Liberty on Saturday, the worst home defeat in his tenure. The Bruins committed 24 turnovers and missed a season-high 22 three-pointers. Aford called it the most disappointing loss in his 28-year coaching career.

It's unusual for UCLA to fire a coach in the middle of the season, but with the Bruins set to open Pac-12 play Thursday against Stanford at home, Guerrero is clearly hoping it spurs a turnaround.

"While Steve led us to three Sweet 16 appearances, he simply hasn't been performing at a consistent level and our struggles up to this point in the season do not bode well for the future," Guerrero said in a statement.

Guerrero said the terms of Aford's contract will be honored by UCLA Athletics, exclusively using department-generated funds.

He said a national search for a new head coach will begin immediately, with former Bruins player and current Golden State Warriors general manager Bob Myers assisting.

Aford's troubles had been mounting since the season began.

On Dec. 15, the Bruins lost to mid-major Belmont at Pauley Pavilion.

Four days after that, UCLA lost by 29 points at Cincinnati. The current slide, in which the Bruins have lost by an average of 15 points, is the longest since the end of the 2015-16 season and the first time the Bruins have dropped four straight nonconference games since 2010-11.

Aford had a 124-63 record in Westwood after taking over the program in March 2013. The 54-year-old coach won one Pac-12 tournament title but never a regular-season league title, and made four NCAA Tournament appearances, including Sweet 16 berths in his first two years.

But the drop-off was swift for a school that owns a record 11 national championships. The Bruins lost to St. Bonaventure in the First Four last season, the first time in school history that UCLA was relegated to a play-in game.

They failed to make the NCAA Tournament in 2015-16, when the team went 15-17 for the program's fourth losing record since 1948 when John Wooden became coach.

Rose Bowl QBs in spotlight

By JOE REEDY
Associated Press

PASADENA, Calif. — The Rose Bowl will be the final college start for Washington's Jake Browning. Whether or not it will be for Ohio State's Dwayne Haskins remains a mystery.

Haskins' future has been as much a topic of conversation as Urban Meyer's final game as the Buckeyes' coach. The redshirt sophomore finished third in Heisman Trophy voting after leading the nation with 4,580 passing yards and 47 touchdowns while directing the Buckeyes (12-1) to a Big Ten title.

After Justin Herbert announced he would return to Oregon for his senior season, Haskins has emerged as the top quarterback prospect should he decide to declare for April's NFL Draft. He has said throughout the week that he is taking his time since the deadline isn't until Jan. 15.

"I'm happy he made that decision, but it has nothing to do with me," Haskins said about Herbert. "I'm just excited to be in a position to make a decision, so I'm just taking it all in."

While many are projecting Haskins as a possible first-round pick, Browning's name doesn't generate as much fervor. The senior has directed the Huskies to a Pac-12 Conference-record 39 wins, but he hasn't duplicated a successful sophomore season when he threw for 43 touchdowns, finished sixth in Heisman balloting and led Washington to the College Football Playoff semifinals.

Browning has thrown 35 touchdowns the past two seasons as the Pac-12 champion Huskies (10-3) showed more balance on offense but there were also times when he struggled with decision-making and turnovers.

"I don't think I've been someone that was super high ranked on anything, even coming into college," Browning said. "I'm kind of used to that. I've been an underdog for a long time, and it has worked out for me."

While Haskins has thrown for at least 230 yards in all 13 games this season, Browning — who threw for 2,879 yards and 16 touchdowns — has done that only five times. Haskins had four games where he threw five or more touchdowns while the most Browning had this season was three, which he did in two games.

What both players do have is the confidence of their head coach. Meyer said he would put Haskins' leadership up there with two of his former quarterbacks J.T. Barrett and Tim Tebow.

Washington's Chris Peterson said Browning's wins speak loudest.

"He hasn't flinched. He's won a bunch of games. His teammates really love him. We love him. And I don't know what there is else to say about him," Peterson said.

NHL roundup

Pirri helps Vegas top Arizona

Associated Press

GLENDALE, Ariz. — Brandon Pirri has had a late December to remember for the Vegas Golden Knights.

The journeyman forward had a goal and assist in the Golden Knights' 5-1 win over the Arizona Coyotes on Sunday night, and has five goals as part of his seven points in the six games he's played for Vegas this season.

Pirri failed to register a point in only one of those games. He's been a regular since Dec. 20.

"It's a lot of fun playing here because everyone's contributing," Pirri said. "Things are going good. I've always believed in myself and I'm getting the opportunity. When you get the opportunity you have to reward the people that put you in this spot and at the same time I have to reward myself. I put in a lot of work."

Paul Stastny also had a goal and an assist and Marc-Andre Fleury stopped 29 shots for Vegas. Reilly Smith, Cody Eakin and Ryan Carpenter also scored to help Vegas win its third straight and extend its points streak to six games.

The Golden Knights have won five of six games against Arizona since Vegas entered the NHL last season.

"We played hard, we played quick. We were good with the forecheck, we were good with the puck and we didn't make a lot of mistakes," forward Jonathan Marchessault said.

A large following of Golden Knights fans made plenty of noise for the visiting team in the most recent installment of the fledgling rivalry, and saw their team take control with three goals in the third period.

The third was a short-handed goal from Carpenter, his second goal of the season.

Just when the Golden Knights' first power play ended, Pirri got a rebound behind the net and back-handed the puck back toward the crease, where Stastny was waiting to stuff it in at 3:35 of the first.

Lewis out as Bengals coach after 16 seasons

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — The Bengals fired coach Marvin Lewis on Monday, ending a 16-year stay in Cincinnati that included seven playoff appearances without so much as one win.

The move ends the second-longest head coaching tenure in the league. New England's Bill Belichick is wrapping up his 19th season with another postseason berth. He's won five Super Bowls and made eight appearances in the title game, both NFL records.

Lewis leaves Cincinnati with a postseason record of 0-7, the worst in NFL history. The Bengals haven't won a playoff game since the 1990 season, tied with Washington for the fifth-longest stretch of futility in league history.

A third straight losing season punctuated by plummeting attendance prompted change-resistant Mike Brown to finally cut ties with Lewis, whose loyalty and close working relationship with the owner brought him repeated contract extensions even as the playoff losses piled up.

They described their parting Monday as a mutual decision.

The Bengals (6-10) lost in Pittsburgh 16-13 on Sunday and finished last in the AFC North for only the second time under Lewis. Attendance at Paul Brown Stadium has fallen to the second lowest in the league, ahead of only the Los Angeles Chargers, who are playing in a small, temporary stadium.

"I didn't deliver what the No. 1 goal is, and that's to be world champions, and we did not get that done," Lewis said at a news conference. "A lot of positives, but that's the one goal as a coach you look forward to doing. Mike and I both decided it's time. I think it's a tough moment for both of us, but we both realized."

The Bengals fired coach Marvin Lewis, pictured, on Monday, ending a 16-year stay in Cincinnati that included seven playoff appearances, but zero victories.

In other NFL news:

■ Miami Dolphins coach Adam Gase has been fired and executive vice president of football operations Mike Tannenbaum has been demoted after the team missed the playoffs for the 15th time in 17 years.

Ross made the moves Monday following a 7-9 season. Gase went 23-26 with the Dolphins, and a 42-17 loss Sunday at Buffalo sealed his fate. Tannenbaum, who held his job for four years and was involved with several disappointing drafts, was reassigned within the organization.

■ The Arizona Cardinals have fired Steve Wilks after just one season as head coach.

Wilks' firing Monday followed a 3-13 season, a few hours after the Jets wrapped up their season with a 38-3 loss at New England.

■ Coach Jon Gruden found another former television analyst to help him on his rebuild of the Oakland Raiders.

The Raiders hired former NFL Network draft guru Mike Mayock as their new general manager on Monday, a person familiar with the move confirmed. The person spoke on condition of anonymity because the hiring hadn't been announced.

■ Vance Joseph was fired as coach of the Denver Broncos on Monday after back-to-back double-digit losing seasons.

Joseph met with general manager John Elway after completing a 6-10 season and was dismissed with two years and about $6 million left on his contract.

■ Todd Bowles' tenure with the New York Jets began four years ago with plenty of promise. It ended with too many losses and no playoff appearances.

The team announced the long-expected decision that it moved on from Bowles on Sunday night, a few hours after the Jets wrapped up their season with a 38-3 loss at New England.

Saturday afternoon.

The Saints (13-3) have the top seed in the NFC, and the Rams (12-4) got the No. 2 spot when they beat San Francisco. Chicago (12-4), whose win at Minnesota knocked out the Vikings and put the Eagles into the postseason, is seeded third and gets Philadelphia (9-7) next Sunday.

Fourth seed Dallas (10-6) will play Seattle (10-6) on Saturday.

C.J. Mosley intercepted a fourth-down pass by Baker Mayfield to preserve the Ravens' 26-24 win as Baltimore rushed for a season-best 296 yards. A year ago, Baltimore missed the playoffs by losing its final game to the Bengals, who rallied with a last-minute touchdown.

"If you want to write a book about this season, probably no one would believe it," coach John Harbaugh said.

Steelers players remained on the field after the edged Cincinnati 16-13 and watched the drama from Baltimore on the videoboard. But their archrival Browns couldn't help them against the equally hated Ravens, and Pittsburgh (9-6-1) is out.

David DeCastro said, "How hard we work, how much effort we put in. To go from 7-2-1 to where we are now is heart-breaking."

Nick Foles, who led the Eagles to the Super Bowl title over the Patriots in Minneapolis last February, guided them to a resounding 24-0 victory at Washington. Then the Bears helped out at Minnesota with a 24-10 win even though they had nothing to play for, being set as the NFC's third seed.

"We're not sneaking in. We're here to do some damage," Eagles safes M. J. Lewis said.

Earlier, the Texans rallied from losing their first three games to win the AFC South and become the No. 3 seed.

Houston easily handled Jacksonville 20-3 Sunday as Deshaun Watson threw for 234 yards and ran for a touchdown, and DeAndre Hopkins had 147 yards receiving.

The Texans finished last in the division in 2017. They and the Bears have done the worst-to-first turnaround this season, making it 15 of the past 16 seasons that has occurred in the league.

"It's do or die now, so you've got to put everything on the line now," Watson said. "Prepare harder than you did before and anything can happen at this point. The tournament is wide open and it's my first playoff, so I'm just excited to get in and see how things go."

New England, meanwhile, will get a week off in early January for the 13th time since 2001, most in the NFL during that span. The Patriots routed the Jets 38-3, and because they defeated Houston during the season, they get the bye.

Texans top Jaguars to wrap up AFC South

HOUSTON — After the Houston Texans fell to 0-3 with a loss at home to the New York Giants on Sept. 23, they appeared to be headed for a second straight losing season.

Instead, the Texans (11-5) won their next nine games and 11 of their last 13, capped by Sunday's win over the Jacksonville Jaguars, to clinch the AFC South.

"We have a lot bigger goals," J.J. Watt said. "I have a lot bigger goals but it's good. Especially after starting 0-3 and everybody writes you off. Guys in the locker room believed. Guys in the locker room never gave up."

Deshaun Watson threw for 234 yards and ran for a touchdown and DeAndre Hopkins had 147 yards receiving in the victory.

The Texans will make their fifth playoff appearance after winning the division for the fifth time in franchise history. Houston returns to the postseason for the third time in four years after bouncing back a 4-12 campaign in which Watson and Watt suffered season-ending injuries.

"The way we started out, it's a testament to the players in that locker room," coach Bill O'Brien said. "They've always hung tough. And to go from 0-3 (and then) go 11-2 in this league is pretty tough to do. Give credit to the players."

QB Ryan gets TD catch in Falcons' victory

TAMPA, Fla. — Matt Ryan's first career reception went for a touchdown and the Atlanta quarterback also threw for 378 yards and two TDs to help the Falcons conclude a disappointing season with a victory over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

Matt Ryan's second field goal, a 37-yarder as time expired, provided the winning points after Jameis Winston rallied the Bucs (5-11) from a 31-20 deficit to a one-point lead with just over five minutes to go.

The Falcons (7-9) escaped a 17-0 hole with Ryan leading scoring drives on five consecutive possessions from late in the second quarter until early in the fourth. He began the comeback with a 19-yard scoring throw to Julio Jones and also tossed a 7-yarder to Calvin Ridley.

In between, Ryan caught a 5-yard TD pass from receiver Mohamed Sanu, Bryant kicked a 49-yard field goal and Tevin Coleman scored on a 23-yard run.

Rams finish sweep of West foes to earn bye

LOS ANGELES — Even after everything the Los Angeles Rams have accomplished this season, they still knew they probably needed to beat rival San Francisco in the finale for a first-round playoff bye.

While their high-powered offense did its part as usual, a fourtakeaway effort by the defense was even more exciting as the Rams secured a well-deserved week off.

Brandin Cooks and Josh Reynolds caught two touchdown passes apiece from Jared Goff, and the Rams wrapped up a six-game sweep of their NFC West opponents.

Cory Littleton returned one of his two interceptions for a TD as the Rams (13-3) completed their winning regular season since 2001 by making sure they get a few days off before they attempt to earn their first playoff victory since the 2004 season.

"We'll enjoy all of that tonight, and understand how big of an accomplishment that is," said Goff, who passed for 199 yards. "You feel great [at] 13-3. We're coming off two great wins, and we get to finish the season 6-0 (against the division). Only team in the league that did that."

The Rams needed the win over the Niners or a loss by Chicago to clinch the No. 2 seed in the NFC postseason. Los Angeles didn't count on the Bears, who ended up beating Minnesota. The Rams played nearly every starter except Todd Gurley and jumping to a 14-0 lead in the first five minutes before stretching it to 28-3 midway through the second quarter.

The Rams hadn't swept San Francisco since 2004.

"We're going into [the bye week] with a lot of confidence after this," Reynolds said. "The rest is going to help us out, and we'll be at our best when the playoffs start."

Prescott, Cowboys rally past Giants

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Dak Prescott threw a 32-yard fourth-down touchdown pass to Cole Beasley on a play that was reversed by video replay and added a winning 2-point conversion pass to Michael Gallup with 1:12 to play for the playoff-bound Dallas Cowboys.

In what might have been quarterback Eli Manning's final start for the Giants, Prescott passed for 387 yards and the season-high four touchdowns, the first three to tight end Blake Jarwin. The Cowboys (10-6) won for the seventh time in eight games.

The game was meaningless for the NFC East champion Cowboys. Coach Jason Garrett rested NFL leading rusher Ezekiel Elliott and two of his top offensive linemen, but kept Prescott (27-for-44) on the field the whole game.

It worked, although the Giants (5-11) did their best despite losing their third straight game.

Saquon Barkley capped a record-setting rookie season with a sensational 2-yard touchdown drive with 3:21 to play.

Janikowski's FG carries Seattle over Arizona

SEATTLE — Sebastian Janikowski made a 33-yard field goal on the final play and the Seattle Seahawks beat the Arizona Cardinals, wrapping up the No. 5 seed in the NFC playoffs and a matchup at Dallas.

Seattle took a 24-21 lead earlier in the fourth quarter on Janikowski's 42-yard field goal, but watched Arizona answer with Zane Gonzalez's third field goal of the game, from 55 yards with 1:49 left to tie it. Gonzalez hit earlier from 36 and 50 yards.

After converting a third-and-1 early in the drive, Russell Wilson hit Tyler Lockett for 37 yards to the Arizona 25-yard line. After a couple of running plays, Janikowski hit the winner to give Seattle 10 wins for the sixth time in Pete Carroll's tenure.

Chris Carson rushed for a career-high 122 yards and a touchdown, but Seattle stalled through a mostly forgettable Week 17 performance. Russell Wilson got sacked six times and a litany of special teams mistakes allowed the hapless Cardinals to stick around.

Patriots rout Jets, clinch first-round bye

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. — The New England Patriots claimed two victories in one game. Actually, it only took them about a half.

Tom Brady threw for three first-half touchdowns and New England clinched its ninth straight first-round bye in the playoffs. The Patriots (11-5) finished the season undefeated at home, where they'll have at least one playoff game.

"Essentially, we won next week because we won today," coach Bill Belichick said. "We'll see who our next opponent is, but we know they'll be good or they wouldn't be playing this time of the year."

After back-to-back December losses left the Patriots with a losing record on the road, they finished with two straight wins in New England to finish with the NFL's only perfect home record.

Chargers end drought in Denver with 23-9 win

DENVER — Philip Rivers and the Los Angeles Chargers recovered from a slow start for their first win in Denver since 2013.

The Chargers (12-4) are headed to the playoffs for the first time in five years, but they'll go in as a wild-card thanks to a last-second loss to the Broncos at home in November.

Were it not for that slip-up, the Chargers and not the Kansas City Chiefs would have earned No. 1 seed in the AFC playoffs.

Rivers was just 14-for-34 for 176 yards and a touchdown and two interceptions. Both interceptions came in the first quarter, something that's happened just twice before in Rivers' 15-year NFL career.

The Broncos (6-10) careened into an offseason of uncertainty after posting double digit losses in consecutive seasons for the first time since 1966-67.

Foles, Eagles cruise

Philadelphia shuts out Washington to make playoffs

By ROB MAADDI
Associated Press

LANDOVER, Md. — Nick Foles' magic stretched all the way back to Minnesota.

Foles did it again, leading the Philadelphia Eagles to a 24-0 victory over the Redskins and the defending Super Bowl champions earned the NFC's final wild-card berth when Chicago beat the Vikings on Sunday.

The Eagles (9-7) will play at the Bears (12-4) next weekend.

"We're not sneaking in. We're here to do some damage," Eagles safety Malcolm Jenkins said.

They might have to do it without Foles, who left the game in the fourth quarter with a chest injury. Foles said he's sore near his ribs and will know more Monday.

"I'm optimistic," Foles said.

Before he gave way to Nate Sudfeld, Foles tied Philip Rivers' NFL record by completing 25 straight passes and threw two touchdown passes. Sudfeld fired a 22-yard TD on his only pass.

It felt like a home game for the Eagles. Philadelphia fans filled FedEx Field, sang 'Fly! Eagles! Fly!' and chanted 'Let's Go Bears!' There were several thousand empty seats and Redskins fans could only cheer for the Vikings to spite Eagles fans.

MARK TENALEY/AP

Philadelphia Eagles quarterback Nick Foles reacts to wide receiver Nelson Agholor's touchdown during the second half of Sunday's 24-0 win over the Washington Redskins in Landover, Md.

"I looked away," Foles said about seeing the Bears-Vikings score on the scoreboard. "I didn't want to know. I wanted to stay focused on winning this game."

Some players noticed the score while others didn't. They watched the final minutes together in the locker room and then celebrated.

"It was exciting," Eagles coach Doug Pederson said. "A lot of hard work that just paid off. It's what we set out to do. Obviously on this journey we didn't meet a lot of our goals, but one of them is to get into the postseason and we were able to do that, and so we're excited."

Foles, the Super Bowl MVP in Philadelphia last February, is 6-0 in must-win games filling in for Carson Wentz.

Foles stepped in after Wentz was sidelined by a back injury earlier this month and guided Philadelphia to an upset on the road against the Rams as a 13½-point underdog. He set a franchise record for yards passing in a game with 471 in a 32-30 comeback win last week against Houston.

The Eagles dominated the Redskins, controlling the ball for 43:19. Philadelphia's defense held Washington to only 89 yards total offense.

The Redskins (7-9) lost six of seven after leading the NFC East at 6-3.

"It just wasn't a good enough year for us," Redskins coach Jay Gruden said. "Hopefully we'll regain that (fan) support sometime soon, very soon. Until then, we have a lot of work to do."

Foles finished 28-for-33 for 221 yards, two TDs and one interception.

Josh Johnson, making his third start for the Redskins after Alex Smith and Colt McCoy sustained season-ending injuries and Mark Sanchez was ineffective, was 12 of 27 for 91 yards and one pick.

"They did what good teams do and took care of business," Johnson said.

Chiefs romp past Raiders

By DAVE SKRETTA
Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Patrick Mahomes stalked Chiefs wide receiver Damarious Robinson on the sideline as chants of "MVP" echoed throughout Arrowhead Stadium, trying to track down a football that would serve as a keepsake not only of this night but of this season.

The first-year starter had just thrown an 89-yard scoring strike to Robinson, the 50th time one of his passes ended up in the end zone. It also gave Mahomes more than 5,000 yards passing, not to mention put a dagger in Oakland and clinched the AFC West title and No. 1 seed in the playoffs.

"They're special," Mahomes said after securing that memo, and after Kansas City (12-4) had wrapped up a 35-3 white-wash of the Raiders on Sunday. "To do those things in this league, that doesn't happen."

Not very often anyway. Mahomes finished with 281 yards passing, the highlights the strike to Robinson and a 67-yard TD pass to Tyreek Hill. That gave him 5,097 yards and 50 touchdown passes, and allowed Mahomes to join Peyton Manning as the only QBs to hit 5,000 and 50 in the same season.

"This team, we love each other. We root for each other. And that's why we've had so much success," said Mahomes.

Hill finished with five catches for 101 yards, becoming the Chiefs' single-season leader for yards received with 1,479, while adding a fourth-quarter touchdown run.

Bears keep Vikings out of playoffs

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — While taking the NFC North champion Chicago Bears to the playoffs for the first time in eight years, coach Matt Nagy has displayed an energetic personality and aggressive mindset throughout his debut.

Even with their postseason position all but set, the Bears refused to let up, and kept rival Minnesota out of the playoffs in the process.

"I love winning. I think it's fun to win," Nagy said after the Bears' 24-10 victory. "So when you win, whoever it is, who cares?"

With the 24-0 win by Philadelphia at Washington, the Vikings (8-7) watched the Eagles claim the last wild-card spot and went home wondering what happened after signing Kirk Cousins for $84 million guaranteed in the offseason.

Victory not enough for Pittsburgh

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — The win they needed but at times didn't act like they particularly wanted finally secured, the Pittsburgh Steelers lingered on the Heinz Field turf after a sluggish 16-13 victory over Cincinnati on Sunday and turned their eyes to the massive video-board in the south end zone.

A season filled with promise six weeks ago before things came undone boiled down to something entirely out of Pittsburgh's control, whether Cleveland could pull off a stunning rally in Baltimore.

The Steelers (9-6) will miss the postseason for the first time since 2013.

"It just sucks," Steelers guard David DeCastro said. "How hard we work, how much effort we put in. To go from 7-2-1 to where we are now is heartbreaking."

And avoidable. Yet four losses in five games forced them to enter Week 17 needing to beat the Bengals and a hope surging Cleveland could upset the Ravens.

Cincinnati took a 10-3 halftime lead, Pittsburgh eventually rallied behind quarterback Ben Roethlisberger — who threw for 287 yards and a touchdown despite missing injured star receiver Antonio Brown to finish with a career-best and NFL-high 5,129 yards passing — and new kicker Matt McCrane booted three field goals.

BALTIMORE — The Baltimore Ravens flipped the script and put one heck of an ending on a regular season that featured countless surprises and plot twists.

Getting two rushing touchdowns from rookie quarterback Lamar Jackson and a late defensive stand, Baltimore squeezed past the Cleveland Browns 26-24 Sunday to reach the playoffs as AFC North champions.

Kenneth Dixon accounted for 117 of Baltimore's season-high 296 yards on the ground, Jackson had 90 and the rejuvenated Ravens (10-6) broke a three-year playoff drought with their sixth win in seven games. Baltimore will open the postseason Sunday afternoon at home against the Los Angeles Chargers.

"It feels good, a home playoff game," cornerback Marlon Humphrey said. "Somehow it happened."

A year ago, Baltimore missed the playoffs by losing its finale at home to the Bengals, who rallied with a last-minute touchdown.

Remembering that disappointment, most of the announced crowd of 70,925 was on its feet as the Browns moved closer to field-goal range with the clock winding down. A 19-yard completion from Baker Mayfield to former Ravens top draft pick Breshad Perriman and a 16-yarder to Jarvis Landry pushed the ball to the Baltimore 39 with 1:20 left.

Following three straight interceptions, the Ravens blitzed Mayfield on fourth down and linebacker C.J. Mosley picked off a pass to clinch it. Baltimore finished a half-game ahead of the Pittsburgh Steelers, who beat Cincinnati 16-13.

NICK WASS/AP

Browns tight end David Njoku, left, is unable to hold onto a catch on as he is pressured by Ravens cornerback Marlon Humphrey in the end zone Sunday in Baltimore.

"There were some nerves," tight end Hayden Hurst said. "I feel confidence that at some point one of those guys would make a big play and sure enough, C.J. did."

After killing off the final seconds, the Ravens danced into their locker room, donned caps proclaiming them AFC North champs, and mugged for selfies and shots of each other.

"If you want to write a book about this season, probably no one would believe it," coach John Harbaugh said.

It's been quite a turnaround for the Ravens, who were 4-5 before Jackson took over for injured Joe Flacco, the team's starting quarterback since 2008. Flacco was behind center in 2012, when Baltimore captured its last division crown and ultimately won the Super Bowl.

The Jackson-led running attack was too much for Cleveland (7-8-1), which was denied its first winning season since 2007. After trailing 20-17 at halftime and 26-17 with 7:20 left, the Browns could not recover against the franchise that left Cleveland after the 1995 season.

Mayfield threw three touchdown passes — including a 48-yarder to Landry — to finish with 27, an NFL record for a rookie.

"I'll make sure I say something about it on the plane ride home," interim coach Gregg Williams said. "Everybody needs a pat on the back, even where you're as competitive as that young man. And he is competitive."

Although Mayfield played the NFL's top-ranked defense for 376 yards, he was intercepted three times.

"Obviously, very disappointed for us to not get the win, but it's a great team. It's a playoff team," Mayfield said. "We want to be in their spot this time next year."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The Indianapolis Colts have Andrew Luck healthy and throwing the ball all over the field.

That's more than enough with an injured Marcus Mariota start watching from the Tennessee sideline.

Luck threw for 285 yards and three touchdowns and the Colts beat the Titans 33-17 on Sunday night for the final spot in the postseason as the AFC's No. 6 seed.

With the Texans winning the AFC South title earlier with a victory over Jacksonville, that left the Colts and Titans playing for the second wild-card berth and a visit to Houston on Saturday.

"It's been a lot of fun," Luck said. "It's been a journey, that's for sure. I think what this team is doing is enjoying the journey."

Luck remained perfect against Tennessee, notching his 11th victory for the most wins by a quarterback since at least 1970 to win his first 11 starts against one franchise. He helped the Colts (10-6) — under first-year coach Frank Reich — end their postseason drought by winning for the ninth time in 10 games after a 1-5 start.

Colts quarterback Andrew Luck runs to celebrate with teammates after throwing a touchdown pass against the Titans in the second half Sunday, in Nashville, Tenn.

"I mean you're 1-5, and that's special," Reich said. "It not only takes the whole team for 10 weeks, so that's very special."

The Titans (9-7) snapped a four-game winning streak with Mariota sidelined by neck and foot injuries. They missed a second straight playoff berth under first-year coach Mike Vrabel.

"We made a decision that Marcus wasn't going to play tonight," said Vrabel, who gave no details on when the decision was made nor the seriousness of his injury. "We'll continue to evaluate him and try to worry about his health and every one of those guys' health — Marcus included."

The Colts intercepted two of Blaine Gabbert's passes in the game 9-0.

Marlon Mack ran for 119 yards and a TD for the Colts. Adam Vinatieri kicked field goals of 53 and 25 yards. The NFL's oldest active player missed his final extra point.

Derrick Henry, who took the Titans' first offensive snap out of the wildcat, finished with 93 yards.

Tennessee was missing three defensive starters with four-time Pro Bowl defensive tackle Jurrell Casey placed on injured reserve Monday and linebacker Brian Orpoku scratched for a third straight game. That left the Titans unable to pressure Luck even with the Colts missing center Ryan Kelly because of a neck injury.

And Luck simply shredded a Tennessee defense that came in as the NFL's No. 2 scoring defense giving up just 18 points a game and sixth against the pass.

The playoff chase went down to the final minutes of the season Sunday, when Baltimore squeezed in as AFC North winner, and defending Super Bowl champion Philadelphia got some help to secure an NFC wild card.

That left Pittsburgh and Minnesota out. Kansas City (12-4) grabbed the AFC's top seed, followed by New England (11-5), Houston (11-5) and Baltimore (10-6). The Chargers (12-4) own the first wild card and will play at the Ravens next Sunday. The Colts (10-6) romped past the Titans 33-17 at Tennessee and have the other wild card. They travel to Houston on
